PROCLAMATION.—To the Citizens of Hancock County.—Whereas, a mob of from one to two hundred men, under arms, have gathered themselves together in the southwest part of Hancock county, and are at this time destroying the dwellings and other buildings, stacks of grain and other property of a portion of our citizens, in the most inhuman manner, compelling defenceless children and women to leave their sick beds, and exposing them to the rays of the parching sun, there to lay and suffer without the aid or assistance of a friendly hand to minister to their wants in their suffering condition.

The rioters spare not the widow nor the orphan, and while I am writing this proclamation, the smoke is rising to the clouds, and the flames are devouring four buildings, which have just been set on fire by the rioters. Thousands of dollars worth of property has already been consumed, and an entire settlement of about 60 or 70 families laid waste; the inhabitants thereof are fired upon, narrowly escaping with their lives, and forced to flee before the ravages of the mob.

By the revised laws, our State, under the criminal code, sixth division, 58th section, page 181, the crime of arson is defined as follows: "Every person who shall wilfully and maliciously burn, or caused to be burned, any dwelling house, kitchen, office, shop, barn, stable, store houses, &c. &c., shall be deemed guilty of arson, and upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term not less than one year, nor more than ten years, and should the life or lives of any person be lost in consequence of any such offence aforesaid, such offender shall be guilty of murder and shall be indicted and punished accordingly."

And whereas, the laws of this State, make it my duty as a peace officer of this county to suppress all riots, routs, &c. &c., and all other crimes.

Therefore I, J. B. Backenstos, Sheriff of the county of Hancock, and State of Illinois, in the name of the people of the said State and by the authority vested in me by virtue of my office, hereby solemnly command the rioters and other peace breakers to desit forthwith, disperse, and go to their homes, under the penalty of the laws; and I hereby call upon the law abiding citizens, as a posse comitatus of Hancock County, to give their united aid in suppressing the rioters, and maintaining the supremacy of the Law.

J. B. BACKENTOS,
Sheriff of Hancock County, Ill.

P. S.—It is a part of my policy that the citizens of Nauvoo remain quiet, and not a man from that city leave as a posse until it be made manifest that the law and order citizens without the city will not have force sufficient to suppress the rioters of this disgraceful outrage, but that 2000 effective men hold themselves in readiness to march at a moment's warning to any point in Hancock county.

J. B. B., Sheriff.
Green Plains, Hancock, Co., Ill., Sept. 13, 1845.

NEW YORK, Oct. 2d.—Extract from a Letter dated Vera Cruz, Sept. 10, 1845.—The feeling of the people has grown worse since you left, but the Government has not done any thing towards preparing for war. We have the worst times here you ever dreamed of. On Sunday last, two shopkeepers, under the portals in front of the market, were murdered and robbed; one had his throat cut, the other nine stabs; and no one knew it for two days, as Monday was a holiday. A Frenchman was killed at Belgrado. A merchant, living in Puebla, had his house attacked by eight or nine robbers armed; they killed two servants and escaped, fighting the police. A Frenchman, three nights ago, was stabbed in the streets of Vera Cruz by three fellows armed with knives, and and stripped. Every thing looks very bad here. God knows what will become of this Republic; it would be an act of charity to take the whole country.

FROM THE MORMONS.—WARSAW, Wednesday Evening, Sept., 17th.—The civil war now rageing here has assumed a violence of character and feeling, of which those who have not witnessed its manifestation, or heard the expressions of the parties, can form no just estimate. The anti-Mormons are firmly convinced that they and the Mormons cannot live in the same community; that one or the other must go, and by a process of reasoning, if it may be called reasoning, upon their real or supposed wrongs, they have justified to their own minds the right to inflict any violence which will drive the Mormons away.

The Twelve Elders, or principal men of the Mormons, have addressed a proposition to the Anties, which was received this evening, and which, I trust, may put a final end to this war. The twelve propose that they will leave Nauvoo, and the county, next spring, provided hostilites are suspended and the vexatious suits which they charge the Anties to have instituted against them are withdrawn, and they are allowed peaceably to dispose of their property, and prepare for their removal. They have appointed a committee of five, to correspond with a committee of an equal number on the part of the old settlers. This proposition is well received by many of the citizens of Warsaw, and if they do not reject it because of the language in which it is addressed to them, (they thinking it disrespectful,) it will most likely lead to a settlement, and to the removal of the Mormons from among them. It is very desirable that this should be the result.—St. Louis Republican.

THINKING OF SELF AND OTHERS.

There are no two traits of character more peculiarly developed than those which are comprehended in the sentence at the head of this article. None are more opposite in their results or in the original principle which gives them form and action. The exhibition of traits occasions much of human happiness and human misery. Indeed, in the simple form of speech which we have chosen to express the idea which we would illustrate, is conveyed a hint that is worthy of our attention.

Thinking continually of one's self is a violation of our duties to others. Civilized society goes on entirely upon the principle of compromise, consession, self-sacrifices, and civility. It would be impossible, for example, for such a community to continue in tranquility or safety for a singly day, if every man choose to indulge all his own wishes, or was allowed to do so. Our readers can follow out this picture for themselves, and imagine a hundred thousand people rushing forth to do what they liked, take what they pleased, and to treat each other as enemies rather than friends. This, happily for us, can never occur in this shape. Public opinion, religion, the law, and a regard for common decency, check and effectually restrain men in civilized communities from rushing into anarchy. Yet with all the respect which is paid to the restrictions society places on itself, there is a secret desire among a vast number of persons to appropriate to themselves their full share, and more than their share too, of the common stock. The intensity of their selfishness is never for a moment inactive. If it has a large sphere of action, it shows itself in the wielding of power, of wealth, or of influence, and here in the greatness of its effects, looses something of the meaness of its impulses. But in the smaller range to which we generally see it confined, it is more obvious, more disagreeable and more observed. The selfish, the man always thinking of himself, generally has an intellect graduated to the scale on which he operates. Indeed there is nothing to which he will not descend to gratify his propensities.

Sometimes the individual is a thorough egotist, and is never happy except when talking of himself. Upon himself his thoughts are ever fixed and nothing external can reach his heart, unless he sees in it some advantage for himself. This principle when it throws of all restraint, fills society with alarm, and keeps it constantly agitated by the commission of crimes.

The man who thinks of others, however, is a being radically different in his character and conduct. He regards mankind as his brethern, and he is foremost in every benevolent work, "doing good by health," and "blushing to find it fame." The public weal is ever in his contemplation; he is anxious for the improvements of society, for the diffusion of knowledge, for the maintenance of good order, the cultivation of morality and virtue, and the promotion of useful objects. He thinks of others first, of himself last. It never pains his heart to witness the prosperity of another, and the pangs which rends it most, are those which arise from the contemplation of the sufferings of the good. His charities are numerous, but secret. He does not seek the praise of men; the applause of his own conscience is reward enough for him.

This habit of thinking of others is the chief ingredient in true politeness. If to this trait the possessor adds education and knowledge of the world, he is invariably a specimen of good breeding and refined taste. He is never intrusive, never torward, never de trop. His attentions are of the most delicate kind. He considers the best mode of doing a favour with as much anxiety as the performance of the act itself. He sympathises with those who demand his sympathy; "he mourns with those who mourn—and weeps with those who weep." Never fired of this career, he continues to follow the dictates of his heart, unaffected by the ingratitude and unwearied by importunity.

It is fortunate for society that such men exist. They preserve it from the corrosion of selfishness, and keep up the standard of human excellence. They show us how the human character may be exalted, and how much good may be done if we have but the mind to do it.

We only lament that there are not more of these men, and we wish their disinterestedness and generous zeal for others were more generally imitated. The world would be vastly improved if our thoughts were more for others than ourselves. A just regard to our own interests is, of course, an indispensable duty. But when it is narrowed down to mere selfishness, it is a vice that needs reformation.

(From the St. John Herald.)

DIG UP CONTENTMENT.—Bretheren! clothe thyself in Winter, with that which may keep thee warm; and in the Summer, with that which may cover thee, not going too slovenly, nor too pompously, rather decently than richly; eat no more than may suffice nature, preferring moderation before excess, for whatseever is more than necessary is merely superfluous. For by it neither the rich man lives, nor the poor man dies. But the diversity and abundance of meats, is rather a disease than otherwise, breeding vicious and slimy humours, whence arise grievons sickness, and mortal appoplexies. Twice, thrice, nay four times happy art thou, who risest in the morning when thou wist, and what hour thyself listeth, without once thinking of serving or being served by any body; for although it be a trouble to have a master, yet it is also a trouble to have a servant, as you shall hear by-and-by. At noon, feed freely, dine securely, run not upon the score with thy Cook, nor be indebted to thy Dispensero, send not for thy coals from the merchant's cellar, where they gather wet aud moisture, instead whereof they will bring you in dust and stones, wherewith thou wilt be coozened; for there are more deceits in the world, than thou ar any man else knows, save God alone: seek not to excel in prudery, affect not too much neatness; fear not every spot that may fall upon thy clothes, be not in love with rich embroideries; be not too careful to keep, nor too fearful too lose. Be not envious nor suspicious; let no occasion move thee to lie; do not purchase preferment by undermining others; nor work not another man's ruin, to work thyself in favour.

Think it fitter for thee to go alone than accompanied; a quick than a slow pace; rather laughing than weeping; eating than dancing; without being noticed by any. That is the best tavern to thee where thou meetest with the best wine, and that the best cook's shop where tho lightest upon the best morsel. In the market-place thou may'st make choice of the best seat, and so thou may'st do the like at all public feasts. In the winter get thee into the sun, in the summer into the shade. Thou may'st cover thy board according to thine own mind; thou may'st make thy bed according to thine own liking, without paying one penny either for the making or standing of it; and may'st chose whether any more shall see thee, disquiet thee or contradict thee. Keep thyself aloof from law business; live a stranger to suits and actions. Free thyself from false witnesses for fear they should part thy goods among them and become masters of all thou hast. Let no man be able to ask the for a penny; keep thyself safe from Decrees, beware how and whom you trust, and upon what terms; but above all (which will be no small glory unto thee,) take heed how thou becom'st a surety for any man. Give no cause to have any executions come out against thee, nor thou to do the like against others. Shun all contentions and debates, and all manner of suits at law. Last of all rest thou satisfied and contented, so that nothing may disturb thee, nor break thy sleep, that thou may'st rise betimes in the morning to think upon these things that may turn to thy good by reforming what is. More anon!
