

THE BORDEN MURDER.

Lizzie Now on Trial as a Murderess.

The mystery surrounding the fate of Mrs. Borden of Fall River, Mass., is as deep as ever. No clue has yet been obtained respecting the murder. The stains and hair on the axes have been tested and an expert has sworn that they are not human. Lizzie Borden has been charged with the crime and is now on trial. At the trial the court room was crowded. Lizzie with her counsel was the cynosure of all eyes.

All along it was evident from the nervous twitching of her mouth that she was not insensible to what was being said on the witness stand, although her eyes were fixed on the chair in front of her. For two days she has keenly watched the witnesses. The testimony has concerned herself more nearly than any, except that of Bridget Sullivan.

The prisoner's friends drank in the words of Prof. Wood at the morning session with feverish interest. No blood spots on the axes, no blood stains on the dress, no poison in the victims' stomachs, an expert theory that the murderer could not have escaped without being well covered with blood from head to foot.

Surely the whole bottom was fast falling out of the government's case. Many of the girl's friends were triumphant and indignant by turns—triumphant that the State's own expert had detected nothing that could point the finger of suspicion at any person inside the Borden household; indignant that Lizzie Borden had been cast into prison on evidence so flimsy that it fell at the first test.

This feeling had been growing all the while since Bridget Sullivan stepped down from the stand, and it needed only Professor Wood's statements to encourage the general expression of disgust at the proceedings brought against Miss Borden.

This feeling of indignation lasted just two hours, during which the court had adjourned for dinner. At the end of that time, when the reading of the testimony of Miss Lizzie Borden at the inquest had begun, the feeling of confidence began slowly to give way to the old uncertainty that has characterized all the theorizing on the case from the start.

There were important divergences in the evidence as offered by Bridget Sullivan and that offered at the same inquest by Lizzie Borden. There were points in which her own story conflicted with what she had told before.

The servant said she saw Lizzie drink coffee, and Lizzie told the people at the inquest that she drank no coffee, and had no breakfast.

The report of the inquest showed that Lizzie had said that she was up stairs when her father came home, and later that she was not up stairs but had been in the kitchen all the time.

Then came the visit to the barn. Miss Churchill and Miss Russell had said that Lizzie went to the barn for a piece of iron to fix a screen. She told the officials at the inquest that she wanted a piece of lead for sinkers for fish lines, and went on to tell about the condition of the lines over the river.

There were minor discrepancies about the evidence as offered in court and at the inquest, and they have had a wonderful influence in strengthening that part of public opinion that has always held Lizzie Borden guilty. The truth or falsity of these statements the evidence may yet conclusively prove and interest is increased.

AROUND THE WORLD.

How the Fredericton Boom Company Carries on Business.

Rafting, like every other class of work, has made great changes. It used to be the custom for anyone, who wished, to run out a boom and raft the logs together. They were then run down the river to the mill. Now, however, all this is changing. The boom company has full charge of the rafting, the work being done more rapidly and at a lower cost than under the old regime.

About a mile from the city the rafting headquarters of the company is fixed. There is a large building, about one hundred feet long, well finished for the men to sleep in. It is divided off into berths, each accommodating two men, similarly arranged in the steerage of an ocean steamer. Above the berths is a passage similar to a hall where the men in wet weather can sit and amuse themselves, out of the way of those who may be trying to get away.

The dining hall is a separate building about ninety feet long, one end being partitioned off for sleeping rooms for the baker and eight or nine cooks. Two large tables accommodate the crew of about one hundred and twenty-five men, at present.

On the river all is systematic. A long boom is stretched athwart the channel on which the men stand to catch the logs as they float past. Each man has one particular "mark," to look after. It is amusing to hear them calling out, pollywoy, turtle, crowfoot, diamond, a three spot huck, two hucks on a hick, a big cross griddle and other combinations which are the private marks or totems of the lumbermen.

When several logs of the same mark are collected a dog line is put across them, they are then passed down the river, the brackening ground where small poles are pinned across, fastening the outside logs. This is called a joint. The joints are then sent to the landing ground where by the aid of machinery other logs are loaded on the joint.

Then surveyed and passed on to brackets who make the joints into a raft by fastening several of them together with poles. The work is well worthy a visit as it goes on very systematically. Where one hundred joints were rafted a few years since four hundred is now the common work. The force is no larger but the men have become drilled to the work, do it easily and quickly and one works to the advantage of another. Mr. Hanbury deserves much credit for this efficient state of affairs as also do Robert Elliot and Daniel Pinn.

CHOLERA SCOURGE.

The Graphic publishes interviews with several of the Russian emigrants compelled to encamp at Gravesend. In their statements these people complain bitterly that the German Steamship Companies have treated them like dogs, supplying them with only potatoes and salt herrings for food, with little or no drink. They declare they have even been kept for hours without food, until their children's cries became pitiable. They claim that no attention has been paid to their sanitary needs, also that they left Russia perfectly healthy.

The Standard's Hamburg correspondent says that although the cholera is reported to be abating, the number of victims today is again very heavy. The disease rages with the most virulence in the suburbs of Horn and Hammerbrook, where hundreds were also struck and many died within two hours. The inquests since last night number 313. It is reported that the porters of Hamburg have carried the infection to 23 towns in Germany alone.

The Liverpool health committee officers report that the general health of Russian emigrants is excellent; that Liverpool is entirely free from cholera with the exception of the cases reported and that there is no danger of the scourge spreading.

The surviving cholera patients who were landed at Gravesend from the steamer Gemma from Hamburg, have been steadily progressing towards recovery and are now nearly well. The other immigrants who came on the Gemma have been found free from the disease and have been allowed to proceed to London.

LABOR TROUBLES.

Non-Union Men Attacked by Strikers.

Serious labor disturbances, arising from the employment of non-union workmen to replace strikers at Salt Union works near Northwich, London, have been occurring during the last few days. The strikers adopted offensive measures, one of which was to attack with stones and other missiles, non-union men managing the salt barges. Many of those attacked have been injured. The company operating the works brought 150 non-union men from Liverpool, and attempted to get them to work. The strikers gathered in force and surrounded the railroad station. When the newcomers began to leave the cars they were violently attacked by the strikers.

A number of the new arrivals, armed with bludgeons and knives, tried to fight their way through the angry crowd, but after a severe conflict, in which the non-union men were badly worsted, the company were obliged to order the men to return to the cars, and to send the train back to Liverpool. The strikers returned to the banks of the river and resumed the attack on the men employed on the boats. Two hundred policemen were despatched to the scene. They tried to disperse the mob and arrested several strikers. The police were unable to obtain mastery and the assistance of soldiers had to be invoked.

HARVEY STATION.

Sept. 2.—The Emeralds trio gave a very pleasant entertainment in the church on Wednesday evening. There was quite a large turnout to hear it. Mr. Smith's address was listened to with great attention, and the singing and recitations of Little Fairy were very fine.

Messrs. Wm. Bell and son of Lakeville, Carleton Co., are here visiting Mr. Bell. They have already collected a large number and shipped them to the American market. The price paid is about $2.50.

Mr. Levi Talbot of Dover Mass., is here spending a few days visiting his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Bell.

Miss Susie Puse and Chas. Patterson, have gone to attend the Provincial Normal School.

NASHWAUK VILLAGE.

Sept. 1.—David Hanson who was severely injured in the mill of R. T. Hanson some time ago is gaining in health rapidly and is able to walk around.

Miss F. Wilson of St. John is visiting her friend Mrs. T. S. Williams.

Mrs. Geo. T. Bradley, has returned from a visit to Mrs. E. A. Barry of Fredericton.

On the 31st a basket social was held at the Durham Bridge hall, and the sum of nine dollars was raised towards the debt of the new Methodist church at the village.

A FISH-CATCHING DOG.

A family living near Newcastle, on the Maine coast, have been eating alive for several weeks past, thanks to their dog. A short distance from the house is a brook that empties into salt water, and which for fifty yards, when the tide is out, spreads its water over a broad bed of pebbles and stones. Several pool like enclosures have been made, so that when the tide goes out the shallow pools are left with the fish. When one is stranded he seizes it in his mouth and bears it ashore. The dog never catches fish with his teeth and never eats them.
