FARM AND FRESIDE.

Timely Hints Useful to the Farmer and His Household.

After being washed, woolen blankets seldom look the same. They turn yellow and lose that pure and dainty finish that made them at first so beautiful. However, when soiled, they may be cleaned, so let us do the best we can for them. In the first place select a sunny day for the purpose, so that they may dry rapidly and without streaks. Prepare an abundance of hot suds, using the very best of soap.

Right here is diversity of opinion among experts. Some prefer warm water, and others again, cold water. Take your choice, but remember one thing—do not change the temperature, for that is what makes the blanket and makes it stiff and hard. If your first suds be of hot water, have the second of hot water, and rise in hot water—and the same with warm or cold. Dissolve half a pound of borax in five gallons of water so hot that you can just bear your hand in it. Wash one blanket at a time, move it back and forth, rub the dirty spots, wash fast, and wring lightly. Then put into another suds, hot, and with borax as before; wash in the same manner, and after wringing thoroughly, rise in hot water, and again in clear, hot water in which has been dissolved a little soda.

Now your blanket is ready for hanging up and there is an art in this process. Stretch a strong clothes line so that the blanket may catch all the sunshine possible, and also be well shaken by the wind; throw just enough of it over the line so that it may be placed to the under side, and snap the wet blanket a few times to get out the wrinkles and make it dry straight. When almost dry, take it down and fold it for ironing. Be careful to fold it exactly true. Use heavy irons, not too hot, and iron over three or four times but only on one side. All the work should be done rapidly, for the chief point in washing woolens is not to let them soak. Under the microscope we see the fibres of wool all little twists and curves, and soaking makes them expand or contract in an irregular way that changes the texture.

White woolen underwear must be washed very much as the blankets, always piece by piece, for if they are thrown by the quantity into the water, some must soak too long. Colored flannels must be carefully dented and every speck of lint or thread picked off. Green spots should be first removed by deodorized benzine or gasoline; then wash in warm suds, in which a little ox-gall has been dropped. This will prevent the colors from fading. A little ammonia helps to dissolve the dirt, and a little starch in the final rinsing will keep them clean longer. It is better to over wash blankets or heavy flannel garments in very cold water, as the drying is so uncertain, but if it is necessary the water should be much cooler than usual, so that the change in temperature will be less when hung out to dry. The result of winter washings is generally a thickened and hard, uncomfortable blanket.

LYNCHED IN A COURT ROOM.

Mother of the Victim Fights the Rope and Her Father Straps the Knot.

Swift and awful vengeance was visited upon Frederick Gustavson in justice when he was hanged from the gallows, November 24. While being arraigned for assault upon the little four-year-old daughter of Jonas Sax a crowd of infuriated citizens closed around him and with a rope furnished by the mother of the child he was hanged from the gallows in the court room. The father of Gustavson's victim adjusted the rope and around the man's neck and assisted in the execution. The sheriff and the mayor of the town appealed to the crowd to let the law take its course, but the men refused to listen. Gustavson pleaded and prayed, and shrieked for mercy as the rope tightened around his neck, but there was no mercy there. The crime for which the wretch was lynched was the previous night. A complaint was recognized him at once and identified him. The father was practically insane from grief and rage, and would have killed Gustavson had he not been restrained by the officers. Gustavson was sullen and would say nothing in his own defence. The prisoner was taken to the court room of Justice Tait after the identification. When it was learned that he was there a mob of a thousand men seemed to spring out of the ground. Words were passed along Main street and crowds hurried to the justice's court, where the execution was to take place at half-past two o'clock.

The little court room was speedily filled, and although the officers guarding the prisoner felt that something was to happen, the latter did not appear to be disturbed. He sat in a chair by a big police officer, who pulled his moustache nonchalantly, gazing at those about him as if he was only a spectator and not particularly interested.

THE HELL OF SAGHALIN.

A New Home For Russian Exiles in the North Pacific.

A few months ago the political and diplomatic world of Europe was surprised by the announcement from St. Petersburg that the deportation of prisoners to Siberia was to end next year. Numerous eulogiums in consequence were spoken and printed upon the czar and his counselors, and the announcement was hailed as an evidence of a great reform movement in Russia. But the delight and satisfaction of those interested in human progress were premature. Siberia, it is true, is to cease to be the penal colony of the Russians, but a land even more terrible to exiles is to take its place. The reason for the change were made public a few days ago in the northern capital.

Few people not students of geography, probably recall the Island of Saghalin, or Karaku. It lies in the Pacific Ocean, north of Japan, and forms the most eastern portion of the Japanese Empire. It is not generally known to the "criminal" world of Russia, for it has been the home of exiles whose hopes of seeing their country practically ended when they landed on its shores. But it will soon be a name familiar to the world, as it is to become the home of the future exiles.

The change has been contemplated, it appears, for some time by the Russian Government. The completion of the great Asiatic line of railway through the immense province will open up a new country to trade, and Russian merchants already covet it, and are planning great wealth in that direction. The government hopes to direct Russian emigration toward Siberia when the railroad is in operation, and develop a mighty Asiatic empire. As an aid to these plans the stain is to be taken from the name Siberia. Russian merchants and voluntary settlers in Siberia must be convinced the government according to Russian papers, that this can only be done by ceasing to deport criminals and political exiles there, and establishing another penal colony, Saghalin in the future will be, therefore, an almost impenetrable island, which the Russian people will conquer.

The climate according to authentic writers, is more severe than any part of Siberia, the island is known among Siberians as the "Hell of Saghalin"—an expression which says volumes in the mouth of an exiled Russian, who knows the terrors of the east. Up to the present time only the criminals with the worst records have been sent to Odesskiy Liak-ock recently gave a harrowing picture of the conditions on the island. From no place do so many try to escape as few ever succeed. The runaways are known as Brodijagan. Despite the accounts of terrible suffering and hardship brought back by unsuccessful fugitives the Saghalin "Brodijagan" increase in number every year. In the year 1891, the Siberian fugitives are described as mild in comparison. Surrounded on all sides by the ocean, with the nearest land hundreds of miles distant, escape from the place is almost impossible.

"The Hell of Saghalin," says the writer, "men are willing to risk death in the waves rather than the terrors of the island. As a rule, the Brodijagan try to escape in bands numbering from three to ten. Those who try to make away in the summer, as a rule take up their abode in the Tugai, an almost impenetrable forest. As long as the clothing and provisions last, they are comparatively happy there, despite their trials. But when the clothing is torn to shreds, when the provisions are gone and when hunger and the bites of poisonous insects have weakened the poor fugitives, they soon die. A few reach the coast, where most of them are recaptured and taken back to the places of torture and torment. Those who choose the winter for flight, fare probably the worst of all. In December the channel is frozen, and many are many to destruction. They travel only by night, concealing themselves in deep ice holes in the day time, in a temperature which cannot be described. But words fail to picture the terror, misery and suffering of these fugitives."

"Among the remarkable prisoners now on the island, is Solomon Bunchetkin, known as 'the golden hand.' She is a criminal for years, she has been in solitary confinement a band of criminals which has committed many atrocious crimes. Although possessing the criminal instinct in a high degree, she is not free from the weakness of her sex. Her guards report that in getting rough with which she paints her cheeks. She also makes her prison curls her hair daily, and arranges her naturally lustrous garments, attractively. When she consents to talk of her eventful life, she never forgets the 'Shah of Persia, who cost her so much money.' When the 'golden hand' was still young and beautiful, and comparatively rich, the result of her unscrupulous life, she decided to steal the most beautiful diamonds of his majesty, who, the time she followed him from place to place, accompanied always a special car in the train, endeavored in every way to get into conversation with the Shah. But her efforts were vain. She never got near the Shah, and was obliged to return home after spending ten thousand rubles in pursuit of his majesty's gems. She recalls the expense to this day with sorrow."
