A MADMAN AT THE HELM.

Desperate Struggle With a Maniac on a British Ship.

An extraordinary story is told by the crew of the British ship "Albani," which recently arrived in New York from Hong Kong. One of the crew taken on at Hong Kong was a Russian Finn named Ivan Maston, who grew moody and dependent as the vessel was rounding Cape Horn. One day when the Finn was at the wheel, he was deviating from his course, and was steering in a most erratic manner. He shouted to Maston to know what was the matter, but the only reply that he got from the latter was a blood-curdling series of oaths. The first mate now knew that something was wrong with the helmsman, and he called to the crew to surround Maston. In the most time Maston was steering all over the compass, and the vessel was in danger of being capsized. His appearance was enough to strike anybody with terror, as he had drawn a huge jack-knife which he flourished in his right hand, and he was rolling in his head, froth was issuing from his lips, and he threatened to cut the heart out of anybody that would come near him. Matters were now in a terrible position, and the captain himself saw that he had to capture the maniac at once or lose his ship. Four of the men advanced cautiously on Maston, who had now placed his back against the wheel and flourished his deadly weapon in a very unimpaired manner. The vessel was now without a helmsman, as the Russian Finn held the wheel. The four sailors dashed upon the madman, who shrieked aloud and struck out right and left with his knife. Fortunately, one of the men managed to seize his hand, while the other three threw themselves upon him. A terrible struggle ensued, the four men rolling over and over on the deck, the Finn scratching and kicking like a demon incarnate. He seized Jim Daly, one of the men, by the right cheek and tore at his hair savagely in it. He suddenly released his hold, and slung the man, reeled to the bow. His eyes were flashing fire and the froth that oozed from his lips fell over the deck of the vessel. When he was running along the side of the ship, five or six sailors jumped on him like a flash, and before he could make any further resistance, he was pinioned. He was then carried below, never ceasing to struggle a moment, and was confined in a cell.

A RELIGIOUS CRAZE.

Causes Lucien Legere, of Scoudouc, N. B. To Mysteriously Disappear.

In Friday week's Manchester Telegram there appeared the following:

"Lucien Legere, quarryman at East Long Meadow, has disappeared, leaving a note stating that he intended to kill himself. He is alleged to have been insane on religion."

The man in question, says the Moncton Transcript, was a native of Scoudouc, near Shediac, where his family now resides, but has worked in the above place for the last two years. On Monday of last week Legere arrived in this city by the afternoon C. P. R., and was accepted at the station by a resident of Barachois, with whom he was well acquainted.

During a brief conversation that ensued, Legere informed him that he had been "visited" by his parents and was then on his return to East Long Meadow. He was to all appearances perfectly sane. On Saturday following the day of his disappearance from East Long Meadow a telegram was received by his relations at Scoudouc, informing them of the matter. The news soon spread rapidly and during Saturday night and Sunday it was the chief topic of conversation. On Monday several of the neighbors of the Legere family gathered at the latter's house and the matter was discussed. The unanimous opinion being that mental derangement was the cause of the escape.

On Tuesday morning as one of the missing man's brothers was passing through the back yard to his work in the fields he noticed a piece of paper stuck on the side of a post near the back door. On the inside of the paper written in lead pencil and signed Lucien Legere, was, "I am home and heard you talking last evening. I am not crazy as you suppose but am of sound mind; I am suffering for Christ sake a violent attack, and I will not come home, you will never see me again. There will be no use in you trying to catch me as I am going to end my life."

A short distance from the place where the paper was found a bark was picked up which gave indication of having contained a canoe. Wednesday morning Mr. Legere found another manuscript with contents of similar import lying in the field near a patch of wood some distance from the house. On Thursday and Friday night a vigil watch was kept by some of the neighbors and the Legere family, but he did not put in an appearance, and Saturday morning one of his brothers arrived in this city for the purpose of consulting a clergyman. One of their relations, Dr. Carleton, who has recently returned to town. The doctor

SLAVERY STILL LIVES.

Where Convicts are Sold for What Their Work Will Bring.

ATLANTA, Ga., August 14.—The recent revelations of Georgia's barbaric system of farming out female convicts have aroused great indignation, even here where the methods have come to be looked upon as a matter of course. In this state the female convict is made to work, not as in the north for the gain of the State, but for the benefit of the man who gets the contract to keep her. A corporation takes charge of all the female convicts, for which privilege it pays $25,000 a year. This year there is about 2,150 female convicts which makes the lease price per capita $11.85 or a little less than $1 per month. The contract is to expire in 1899, and probably will not be renewed by the company now controlling the convicts, the claim being that even at the low rate now in vogue it is impossible to get the required work from them.

Colonel W. H. Mattox, planter, who has 5,000 acres in the northern part of the state, has the contract. The women whom the state has sold to him are as much his slaves as ever negroes were in ante-bellum days. There are several white women among them.

The women, the captain says, are vicious. He gets all the work he can out of them, and no questions are asked as to his method of bringing this result about. He is an extremely confederate officer, and he is used to having his orders obeyed. Notwithstanding that the army under him is an army of women, he finds ways to make them amenable to discipline as strict as any ever sustained "at the front."

His guards are a set of the best of a great many—are all men, and a moment's conversation with any of them will prove that they are not above the prejudices and faults that exist among northern turnkeys, while the fact that their charges are all women and that they often work in lonely parts of an enormous farm offers many temptations for immorality and brutality that are impossible in the comparatively well regulated prisons of the North.

Many of the women work in the chains and all of them wear a striped prison garb of short skirt, half sleeved waist and something else if they want it. Few of them want it.

They are employed at the hardest kind of manual labor—plowing and cultivating cotton fields like men. They rise at 3:30 in the morning and are ready to go to work at 4:30. The breakfast consists of fried meat, biscuit and syrup. As soon as the meal is completed the women form in line, and with guards armed with horse pistols at head and rear march to the stable area. The plow women go to the stable for their milk, which they lead or ride from the stable, as they see fit.

Shoes are furnished, but usually are not worn in the field. A soft felt hat, an old bonnet or a towel completes the costume.

At 11:30 all hands stop work for dinner. If they are within a mile of the quarters they go there, but if they are at a greater distance their dinner is hauled out in a cart. Nearly every day some will eat in the field and the rest will be at the quarters. The dinner consists of potatoes, beans, meat and black bread.

The lessee always likes to keep free labor near his convicts. The wages labor gives the alarm in case of an escape. They assist the guards by their presence and deter attempts to run away. Two or three wage men and women are always working within sight of the quarters. There is also a pack of hounds kept for the particular purpose of tracking fleeing women.

Chief Captain Mattax has worked the convicts there has only been half a dozen escapes. One woman was suspected by her companions of being an informer, and was compelled to run away. Her fellow convicts furnished the money to pay her fare to Atlanta and she was there a week. On reaching the capital she experienced qualms of conscience, and made known to the police that she had escaped. She was sent back, received a whipping and was put at work which kept her away from the other women.

Allice, one of the white women, once tried to escape. Her room overlooked the yard in which the hounds are kept. Every day she would carry something to her room and call the hounds to her window and divide with them. She made an attempt to run away, but she was caught in the pack. The day Allice slipped away the dogs were not in the field. They were brought hurriedly and soon on the trail. They ran off in the direction the women were believed to have taken for Allice had a companion. For a week the trail was followed. It led deep into a track of woods along the river. Great was the surprise of the guards when Reed suddenly appeared from the bushes wagging his tail. Nothing could induce him to resume the search and he was bound in the pack. When Allice was captured, she said that when Reed came upon her in the bushes she just patted him on the head and he thought that he belonged to her as much as to any one else so he wagged his tail and walked off.

The penalty for running off is a whipping. The blows are administered with a strap, sometimes on the bare skin. And yet we hold up our hands in horror when we hear about Siberia.

Sunday is rest day. The prisoners go out in the lot which is surrounded by a barbed wire fence, and there are under the watch of a guard. A preacher comes and gives them a sermon, for which he gets $3 from the state. In summer the convicts are sent to the river for a bath and swim.

It was not many years ago that men and women convicts were herded indiscriminately together on the same farms. The result was a moral horror. The State has "last had the decency to demand that the sexes be separated, but the present system is enough to turn a civilized northern sick at heart.

TORTURED TO DEATH.

Two weeks ago a vessel left St. Pierre for the banks, having on one of its crew a Frenchman, who knew nothing about fishing or working a vessel. This engaged the other members of the crew and they set about torturing the unfortunate man to death. It is charged that the crew would strip him of his garments, and then each one would take a turn beating the victim on the bare back with a rope. After the man's flesh was cut and bruised, the fenshich crew would lift him into a puncheon half filled with spring ticks. This was kept up from day to day, until death relieved the unfortunate man. A few hours after the vessel arrived at St. Pierre, the terrible crime leaked out, resulting in the arrest of the whole crew on the charge of willful murder.
