LIVE CHILD IN A COFFIN.

Waiting the burial it Cried Out and was Rescued.

Corner Johnson and a jury investigated a most extraordinary case at Prospect cemetery, Toronto on Saturday. At Fairbank, about seven miles out on the Vaughan plank road, live William Malon, a grocer, and his wife, on Tuesday morning, October 3, Mrs. Malon gave birth to a child, which being supposed to be stillborn was placed in a box after breakfast that morning and taken to Prospect cemetery for interment. When the clerk of the cemetery came to look at the death certificate he found that it was written out; that is to say, it was not one of the regular printed forms, as is required. He refused to accept the body for burial. In this certificate the child was described as a male. At last the body was accepted at the cemetery and placed in the coffin until the grave could be dug.

SOUNDS WITHIN THE BOX.

The box had only been a short time when the clerk heard some faint sound from the box. He at once rushed out to call a couple of workmen, but they thought he was nervous and would not go to it. While he was talking to them they heard the child cry out, and immediately they broke open the box and the little one was lying in a perfectly considerable strength. Word was at once sent to Dr. P. H. Bryce, who was Mrs. Malon's physician, but that gentleman was down in the city so Dr. Page was brought from Fairbanks. He at once gave the child proper attention and then moved it to his house where he had it properly treated.

DEATH OF THE CHILD.

The poor little thing lived until about 1 o'clock next morning. Dr. Page took the remains to the cemetery again, but of course superintendent Pinder refused to receive the body without the consent of the father. Dr. Page and the superintendent at once visited Mr. Malon's house, where they told him of the affair, but took care not to let the mother hear that a dreadful thing had occurred to her child.

Mr. Malon asked Dr. Page if the child was dead, and when answered in the affirmative authorized the superintendent to have the little girl—for so both Dr. Page and the cemetery authorities pronounced it—buried in the lot he had provided. This was done. The body was exhumed and a post mortem examination held.

WHAT WAS IT.

Horrible Monster That Attacked Two Women on a Lonely Road.

As Mrs. Casper Mann and Mrs. Joseph Groenick, two well known ladies, says the Toronto World, were returning home in a buggy about sunset, they heard an unusual noise in passing along the road south of the Magnus quarry. The noise was a cross between a hallow and a shriek and excited the curiosity of the hearers, but as they could not locate it, they continued on their journey. In approaching a lonely spot on the road where large trees stand on either side and all around is covered with underbrush they heard the noise again. This time it appeared to come from the boughs of a large tree just ahead of them. As they approached the tree, there was a commotion in the branches, and the lonely and helpless women were hurried to see a horrible-looking monster descending from the tree crotch-fashion. The horse seemed paralyzed with fear, and for a moment refused to answer the frantic effort of the driver to force him ahead.

As the animal leaped from the ground it gave a terrific snarl and roar, and started for the buggy. One of the occupants seized the whip and prepared for the attack. Recovering the power of locomotion, the horse started at a brisk rate down the road. Then the race for life began.

The strange monster, though apparently constructed made excellent time, and in a few minutes had overtaken the buggy and was making frantic efforts to climb up on the box in the rear. The lady with the whip laid on the lash with all her might in the hope of frightening the ferocious-looking animal off, but the stings of the whip only seemed to infuriate it and increase its determination to devour everything in sight.

As the women were about to give up the fight and surrender themselves to the rapacious brute the joyful sound of the bark of a friendly dog fell upon their ears and they realized that they were nearing a farm-house. To their gratification two men stepped out on the road a short distance in front of them, and it was but the work of a moment for the women to notify them of their terrible predicament. As the men and dogs approached, the animal seemed to sniff danger, and with a roar that could be heard for a quarter of a mile, whirled to one side and ambled through the bushes. As it made its way through the brush its course could be plainly discerned by the waving branches.

The men, being unarmed, did not deem it wise to follow the animal, and the dogs showed no disposition to take up the chase.

Ever dead than alive, the women were assisted into the farm-house, where they were given such stimulants as were at hand, and when sufficiently recovered, they related their experience as given above.

The animal, they say, was about seven feet long. Its head was long, and ended in a beak like that of an alligator; covered with scales and ornamented with a pair of wings, which would probably measure six feet from tip to tip. It had four legs and its feet were cloven and covered with a hoof. The smell of its breath and body was terrible and pervaded the atmosphere for some time after it had escaped to its retreat in the woods. In its effort to climb into the buggy, the animal left unmistakable proof of its hoofs on the buggy bed, there being deep cuts and scratches all over the rear of the vehicle.

The spot where the animal made its appearance and the country for miles around is lonely and seldom frequented by farmers or others, and is certainly just the place for a wild animal of any kind to seek its lair.

Inquiry of scientists and naturalists, fails to throw any light on the existence anywhere of such an animal as this, and it is probable that a searching party will be organized in the hope of capturing it, and thus adding another curiosity to zoology.
