MURDER.

Shocking Tragedy at Fairville Monday Morning.

A Young Englishman Brained with an Axe in the Hands of a Jealous Husband.

THE INQUEST AND VERDICT.

A shocking murder was enacted at Fairville, St. John, on an early hour Monday morning. Guildford Crawford in a fit of jealousy battered in the head of John Henry Branton, a young Englishman.

The dreadful deed took place in Crawford's house, in what is known as "Brown's flat," on the road to Cushing's mill. The deceased, John Branton, boarded with Crawford. Not long ago Crawford got the idea into his head that Branton was paying attention to his wife, although there did not appear to be any justification for any such suspicion. He did not accuse Branton openly, but accused his wife, and although she denied the allegation and his son and daughter pointed out that it could not be true, he still remained in the same mood.

Sunday night the members of the Crawford family and Branton went to bed in excellent spirits. They had been all sitting in the kitchen conversing freely. Crawford was there too and said nothing that would show that he was disturbed in mind. The others talked and laughed and had no foreboding of the tragedy that was to be enacted before the light of another day had hardly begun. The family retired to bed at about 10.30. Branton slept in the same bed in a room with Hartley Crawford, a son of Guildford Crawford's. About half-past four o'clock Branton awoke and found that he was lying in his bed with a lighted lamp in his hand. He called out and asked him what he was doing up so early. He replied, "It's five o'clock." He then went out and lit the fire. Hartley fell back to sleep. The next thing he knew he was awakened suddenly and saw his father standing at the side of the bed with an axe uplifted

in his hand. Before he could realize what was the matter or do anything to prevent his father from committing a crime, the blow fell, the corner of the head end of the axe striking Branton who was sleeping on his side on the bed, on the temple over the left eye. He saw no more than one blow struck and thinks his father must have struck one or two blows before he was awakened. Poor Branton never stirred. Stunned by the blow he lay motionless. Crawford then went to the door of the kitchen and began walking up and down the floor and cried out "Ob, father! How could you have the heart to kill poor Jack?" Seeing the axe the girl became alarmed that her father might do further damage and she took it and concealed it from her father. Crawford was in the yard drawing water from the spring. She heard and hurrying back to the house saw what had been done. Uttering a wild cry she ran to the door, where she found her father, who was shouting "Ob, father! How could you have the heart to kill poor Jack?"

She recovered a little she was taken to the house of Charles Arbo. The poor woman was nearly distracted with grief and terror. Meanwhile Hartley had run out and accused some of the neighbors, who learning what had happened, went for Dr. Gray and Officer Hennessy. Dr. Gray arrived about a quarter to six and at once saw that Branton could not live any length of time. He bound up the wounds as best he could and then went away. Hennessy arrived about seven o'clock. Crawford was informed he had gone up stairs to his room, but was told he had better not venture up, as he was armed with a club. The officer, however, went up, and instead of finding, as he expected, the body of the man, he found the man on the bed. He got up quietly, when ordered by the officer, and accompanied him quietly to the Fairville lock-up.

Branton grew gradually weaker and those that remained with him until he died say that he was swooning in his blood in his throat. He died shortly after seven o'clock.

THE INQUEST.

Coroner Robinson was early notified about the affair, and before nine o'clock he had summoned the following jury: Henry Allingham, Chas. Doherty, John Morris, John O'Neil, Cephas Durden, John Gregg and John McKinnon. Mr. Allingham was chosen foreman. They arrived at the body, where the inquiry was commenced.

The first witness was Dr. Doherty, a medical practitioner of Fairville. He said: "I was called about 7 o'clock this morning by a small boy, whose name I do not know, to go and see a man who had been struck with an axe. I started out, but on the way I was told the man was dead. On arriving I went into the bedroom and saw the man dead. He had been worked in Baker's mill. He was not a drinking man, and he had no relations in this country but he said to have a brother in Pennsylvania.

Crawford is about forty-seven years of age. He resided for some years back in Sussex. Last May he came to St. John and resided in Portland for a short space of time. He then moved to Fairville. He worked in the brickyard for a while, but knocked off on account of illness. He has a wife and three children. He was not a drinking man, and he had no relations in this country but he said to have a brother in Pennsylvania.

He was employed in Messrs. D. Money and Sons brickyard. So far as is known he had no relations in this country but he said to have a brother in Pennsylvania.
