The Free Baptist church which has been quite extensively repaired and presents a very attractive appearance, was reopened for service Sunday.

The Raymond excursion party numbering twenty-five persons, arrived at the Queen yesterday and left by the boat this morning for St. John.

The Tartars went to St. John today and are playing the Starlights this afternoon. On Friday they will meet the Roses and Gas House nines, returning home Saturday.

James Paris, a young colored man, who hailed from Truro, Nova Scotia, died at the Victoria hospital Friday, and his remains were interred in the rural cemetery at the civic expense Saturday.

"Very nice, but not good looking," was the verdict of one of Woodstock's fair maidens rendered regarding a popular Fredericton cricketer, who was one of the belles of the ball up there last week.

New electric arc lights have been placed on Smythe street, corner of George; on Campbell street, near the steamboat landing, and in front of the cathedral entrance on Brunswick street. The present city council evidently believe the light furnished is an excellent article.

Edwin Hall, two-year-old son of Charles Hall, York street, took three teaspoonfuls of laudanum Monday, but his mother, who was near by, soon discovered what had happened and at once gave emetics. Dr VanWart, who was summoned, worked with the child until it was out of danger.

John McGinnis, clerk in Lucy's shoe store, while returning from Doak Settlement Sunday night, was held up on the C. P. R. track near College road by a gang of roughs who demanded money. McGinnis said he had neither and not until his assailants had made a thorough search was he allowed to proceed.

Engineer Cunningham, of the steamer Olivette, charged with obstructing constable Foster in the discharge of his duty, as mentioned in THE HERALD last week, was acquitted before Magistrate Raymond at Maugerville, and the others, Whittaker and Day, were committed for trial in the Sunbury county court.

Sells Bros.' great circus gave four performances at St. John Monday and Tuesday and made a great hit. The Telegraph says it is the finest show that ever visited that city, the street parade was over a mile long, and the Sun, Globe and all the other papers, speak in the highest terms of the circus. It will be in Fredericton Aug. 1st.

A five year old son of Rev. J. D. Freeman climbed up on one of the gas posts at the Baptist church corner Monday evening, and falling from the top, sustained quite serious injuries. Drs. Bridges and VanWart were called and it took two or three stitches to close up a cut over the little fellow's eye. He will soon be all right again.

The case of Alfred Budd, for doing insurance business in Fredericton without a license, was reviewed before Judge Vanwart Saturday, and the conviction made by police magistrate Marsh was set aside on the ground that the evidence did not show that the defendant did business within the city of Fredericton. C. E. Duffy for defendant, C. W. Beckwith for plaintiff.

Brakeman James Dennison, of the Canada Eastern Railway, had a narrow escape from death Monday afternoon, on Cross Creek grade, while en route to this city from Chatham on his train — the through freight. He was running along the top of a car loaded with boards, and stumbling fell just as he was about to cross to the next car. He was able, however, to pull himself clear of the train and was dumped to the ground below with the train running nearly twenty miles an hour. It was a wonder he was not killed on the spot, but as it was he escaped with a badly cut face and bruised body. He came on with his train and is now nursing his wounds at his home at Marysville.

The Fredericton cricketers who played at Woodstock Wednesday were badly defeated by the team of that town, Woodstock scoring 97 in one inning and Fredericton only 65 in two innings. The only Fredericton men making a large score were J. S. Campbell, who put togeteher 14 in the 2d inning, and Scott, who secured 17 in the 1st inning. The Fredericton men sadly missed their chief bowler, Tom. Fowler, who was unable to accompany them. Woodstock's highest scorer was G. A. Taylor, of the Merchants' bank, who got 25 in the 1st inning. The Fredericton boys, however, played a great game at the ball in the evening, whirling Woodstock's fairest in the mazy waltz. It is said that a popular young bank teller from this city, and an esteemed educational official quite succumbed to the charms of two young ladies who were rivals as belles of the evening. The members of the team returned home Thursday evening, with the exception of one gentleman, who remained to arrange some international complications between the United States and this country. The boys speak in the highest terms of the kindly treatment they received during their visit, especially mentioning the attentions of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. A. Taylor. They say they could'nt seem to play cricket a little bit, but at the ball — "jimminy!"

Dr. McLeod's Opinion.

In the Religious Intelligencer, Rev. Dr. McLeod adds to the embarrising position of Hon. Geo. E. Foster in this county on the question of remedial legislation. The Intelligencer says that representatives of Protestant constituencies who permit themselves, for any reason, to assist the Roman Catholic church in its attempts to control legislation may make up their minds to take the penalty — defeat, when next the people go to the polls.

The Editor Was Slugged.

Quite a sensational encounter took place on the verandah of the Adams House, last Monday evening, says the Chatham Advance, arising out of a virulent attack on a prominent public man by a provincial daily, the editor of which was visiting Chatham. The gentleman who had been assailed, hearing the editor was in town, went to the hotel and castigated him until he apologized and promised never to again offend in the same way.

The Chatham World, referring to the same affair, says: "John L. Sullivan had Masonic Hall engaged, but we hear nothing of his coming. The rumor is that he has heard of the muscle and science recently displayed by a Miramichi politician, and is afraid of being knocked out."

THE HERALD learns from other sources that the editor hailed from Fredericton, and that he was very promptly done up by the politician, who, although the smaller man of the two, showed remarkable agility and science.

Miss Mamie Cole, a popular young Woodstock lady, daughter of J. C. Cole and well known to many in Fredericton, was married this morning to Dr. McCann of Bangor. Mrs. J. H. Barry and Miss Aggie Owens of this city were present at the ceremony, and all the fair bride's friends in this city will wish her every happiness.

The friends of Geo. T. Whelpley, one of our best known and popular citizens, have felt much anxiety during the past few days on account of his very serious illness. He has suffered severely from inflammation, and at one time it was thought a delicate surgical operation would be necessary. However, during the past two days there are signs of improvement in the patient, and it is hoped he will soon be around again.

Prof. Bristowe, the efficient organist of the Cathedral, left Monday for Halifax and after spending the week with his brother in that city, will sail on Saturday in the Furness liner, St. John City, for London, to spend three months with his friends in England. On Saturday evening a number of the Professor's intimate friends presented him with a very elegant article which he will find useful in travelling, and Sunday evening at the Cathedral, after the regular service, he gave an organ recital of high class sacred music, and sang solos in fine voice, the whole proving most enjoyable to the large number of persons who remained to hear the program.

The Halifax Herald says that general regret is felt among the Methodists of Wolfville, N. S., at the transfer of Rev. Oscar Groulund from the Methodist church at that place to the charge of the Methodists at Rilcey's Cove. Mr. Groulund is a native of Iceland, is a graduate of a Swedish university, a B. A. of Mount Allison, and took his M.A. in course at Acadia a month ago — standing at the head of his class. He speaks five languages, was a great favorite with the professors at Acadia, and was popular with the people of all denominations in that cultured community. He is a thorough linguist, a studious and practical preacher, a successful pastor, and has a charming and accomplished wife. The best wishes of the people of Wolfville follow him to his new charge. [Mrs. Groulund is a daughter of Rev. Job Shenton, and in her maidenhood days was well and popularily known in Fredericton. HERALD.]

DR. HARRISON.

How the Address to the High School Pupils of the University's President Affected One Listener.

[Com. to St. Stephen Courier.]

St. Stephen has had the honor of a visit from the President of the University of New Brunswick, and we feel assured that there was not a reading or thinking citizen among us but made an attempt to have the opportunity of hearing his address to the graduating class of the St. Stephen high school. In a few words he summed up in a masterly way what he considered to be the proper attitude for a reasonable young person toward the life which he sets out to travel; and his words fell with more than ordinary welcome upon the ears of most of us, because the great and absorbing question to-day before the people of Canada is the relation of religion to the public schools, but after hearing Dr. Harrison our minds will be more easy upon that point for New Brunswick. His example is a power which the lesser minds will surely do well to follow. He told us once again of the magnificant qualifications of the University which he had the honor to represent, which we were glad to hear repeated, believing as we do that it is second to none in this country, but it ought to have, perhaps, no more alluring attraction to the earnest student than that of having for its head a man like Dr. Harrison. What parent would not rather have his child under the influence of a man who is known to be true to God as well as to man, than under one who thinks he can save man by ignoring God? It delighted our hearts to hear a man of his position and authority not afraid to declare in the face of this age of skepticism and peevishness about sacred things, his unswerving allegiance to the Christian faith, and to give us his advice, chosen from a long experience, that there can be no true success for the young man or woman setting out in life without incessant prayer for power from God. There can be no fear for Canada while such men are at the head of our educational institutions, and we are sure there are many.

Pt. C. E. Neill again led in the rifle league matches Saturday with the splendid score of 90 out of a possible 105 points. Mr. Neill is doing great shooting this season and should go to Sussex and Ottawa. He is recognized as the best shot in York county.

FREDERICTON POETS.

Prof. Roberts and Bliss Carman are Breezily Discussed by a Toronto Writer.

The war among the poets rages with unabated fury in the columns of the Toronto Globe. It appears that a few months ago an article appeared in Muncey's Magazine which lauded Prof. Roberts and Bliss Carman, two Fredericton boys, to the skies as writers of poetry, and also paid some pretty compliments to Archibald Lampham, another Canadian wooer of the muse. To this another poet, W. W. Campbell of Ottawa, formerly a St. Stephen clergyman, took offence because he was not included in the list of Canada's greatest poets. Mr. Campbell wrote a very vigorous article in the Toronto Globe in which he bitterly complained of the treatment accorded him, and intimated that Roberts and Carman had something to do with the preparation of the magazine article puffing themselves. This letter of Campbell's has drawn out several warm defences of the Fredericton poets, and a note from Mr. Carman himself. A Windsor gentleman also defends Mr. Roberts in the Globe, and Frank Pollock, writing in the same journal, has this among other things to say of the dispute:

Mr. Pollock's View.

It seems impossible for a certain class of critics to express an opinion on the merits or demerits of any author without destroying the value of the criticism by pushing it into the most ridiculous exaggeration. When we read in an American magazine that Bliss Carman is a typical Canadian poet, possessing great metrical art, and at times even rising into the white light of true inspiration, we are pleased, and feel proud to call our expatriated singer a fellow-countryman. But when the writer goes on to say, amid the laughter of the gods, that Carman possesses an art more than that of Tennyson; that Roberts should be placed above Arnold, and that these, with half a dozen others, should be unceremoniously lumped together and bundled into the seventh heaven of literary immortality, one is apt to discharge the book to the extreme end of the room with a vigorous expression of disgust.

Personally, I have the warmest admiration for all three, finding peculiar merits in each, and likewise peculiar defects. Now, I do not think that it is too much to say that Mr. Campbell is the only living Canadian poet who shows the faintest glimmerings of dramatic art in his work. Carman comes nearest it in one or two poems, but from most of his work it is conspicuously absent. Roberts attempts it occasionally, but fails in producing more than a tableaux, as in "Acteon" and "In Apia Bay," and destroys the effect by a multitude of details.

Campbell, on the contrary, excels in this, and is almost always dramatic when not melodramatic. Examples of this are to be found in his second volume, "The Dread Voyage." Here are — I say it mindful of Carman, Roberts and the rest — the finest pieces of objective work done by any living Canadian writer.

When, however, Campbell deserts lyrical poetry for the higher and harder field of the drama proper, as he has recently done, he scores an unmitigated failure. "Mordred" is truly a wretched affair, and "Hildebrande" is tolerable only as placed beside its companion.

Just as Campbell excels in the objective, so Roberts and Carman are pre-eminent on the subjective side. Of the two, Roberts is certainly the more akin to Tennyson. "The Marvellous Work," "Consolation," "The Foot Path," have the true Tennyson flavor, with all that the word implies. In fact the poem "Grey Rocks and Greyer Sea" bears so close a resemblance to "Break, Break, Break, that we can only suppose it to have been an intentional imitation. His poems which we may denominate "cosmic" can scarcely be surpassed in impressiveness and depth of thought, as, for example, "In the Wide Awe and Wisdom of the Night."

Certainly Roberts possesses a more distinctive flavor of his own than most poets. Though he possesses something of the grace of Herrick, the depth of Tennyson, and the fire of Swinburne, yet all these qualities are welded together into a style peculiarly his own.

Carman is distinctive too, but in a different way. There is something of the savage in all his work; something large, elemental, full of the dash and spray of the water. This is good, but when it leads him into an inarticulate shrieking, as too often it does, it has exceeded its usefulness. In matter, Carman's greatest fault is mysticism; in style, a tendency to lapse into obscurity, and Browningese, in the "opprobious sense of the word." His earlier poems are almost free from this serious defect; in fact, it seems to have grown on him. The poem which gives its name to the volume "Low Tide on Grand Pre" is, to my thinking, his finest work. There is just enough of the mysterious in it to make it fascinating. But when he goes on to the deep shadows (immanis umbra) of the "Granite Gate," he will find few to follow him.

It is when he turns this dangerous gift to the treatment of the supernatural that he makes his greatest success. A splendid example of this is "The Yule Guest":

"Out of the night there came a weird,
And cried at Yanna's door,"

is a verse which for pure awesomeness is unsurpassed, I think, by anything but the old ballad:

"It was the silent, solemn hour,
When night and morning meet;
In glided Margaret's grimly ghost,
And stood at Williams feet."

It is useless to multiply quotation and comparison. These three poets are all true poets, pre-eminent in different fields. Roberts and Carman excel in the subjective; Campbell in the objective; yet, inasmuch as Campbell occasionally is extremely happy in subjective work, as "In the River Bay," "A Lake Memory," and many others, I would consider him a greater all-round poet than either of the others, though not attaining the heights reached by them in their own especial fields.

Between authors, comparisons are odious, deceptive and impossible. The field of Campbell is wider; the height of the others greater. To make judgment between them is simply to proclaim one's individual taste.

A FREDERICTON BOY

Who is One of the Leading Journalists of Chicago.

In the June Review of Reviews [American edition] Willis J. Abbot has an article on Chicago newspapers and their makers. It contains a portrait of Slason Thompson, a brother of Mrs. A. G. Blair and the Misses Helen and Mary Thompson of Fredericton, and a leading journalist of that city. It says of him:

To-day the ownership of the Evening Journal is vested in John R. Wilson, nephew of the three brothers who joined in the management of the paper in its early days, and Slason Thompson, who is the editor-in-chief. The paper has lost nothing of its political prestige under Mr. Thompson's editorship. It is unquestionably the only newspaper in Chicago to the editorial page of which people turn first upon picking it up. The dullness of an editorial page, which too many newspaper men mistake for dignity, Mr. Thompson abhors. His writing is always clear, lucid forceful, often relieved by a touch of humor, usually very personal. The journal is held a newspaper of surpassing dignity, but its editorial page is a sort of Donnybrook fair, as the republicanism of the paper has never wavered in its half century of existence, the heads that suffer are usually those of Democrats, though on occasion the recalcitrant Republican feels the bludgon. Mr. Thompson is a young man, a native of Fredericton, a man of much literary cultivation, a lover of classics and a good fighter. His newspaper experience has been extensive, he having served in New York, San Francisco and Chicago, and filled almost every position on a newspaper. In collaboration with Clay Greene he wrote the successful comedy, "Sharps and Flats," in which Robinson and Crane appeared some fifteen years ago.

Coming, the Only Show of Heroic Size and Fame.

Sells Brothers' Enormous United Show is not only the biggest, brightest, cleanest and best exhibition on the terrestrial globe, but is more liberally managed than any circus now travelling. This season the big show will be greater than ever before. Refulgent dawn of a new era; originating and inaugurating new ideas and features; improving and perfecting its magnificent performances. They have doubled their attractions, enlarged their already enormous canvasses, increased rather than reduced salaries, discarded no act or artist of prominence, materially and prominently augmented rather than depleted their acceptable all-overshadowing confederation. Admission as usual. Children half price.

There is not now — there never has been — there never can be a like opportunity of witnessing so surprisingly great and supereminently attractive an aggregation such as Sells Brothers' present in all its positively undivided and undiminished excellence, with no feat or feature omitted and no attraction substracted, but, on the contrary, vastly re-enforced by all that is superbly amusing and instructive. The glorious three ring circus presents every act and feature as advertised, embracing all of the celebrities of the arenic world, three hundred startling acts in three separate rings and two elevated stages, fifty mammoth cages filled with rare wild beasts, trained hippopotami, trained sea lions and seals, performing elephants, flock of ostriches, rooster orchestra, pig equestrains, trained kangaroos, lordly lions, stately Indian tigers, and marvelously trained wild and domesticated animals. Introducing in the gala hippodrome races realistic, imposing and stupendous, revival of ancient Rome, chariot races, hurdle races, flat races, tandem races, donkey races, pony races, camel races, elephant races and thirty-six horse riders, and in triple circus equestrians, jockeys of all nations, educated horses, trained ponies, comical clowns, jolly jesters, acrobats, ærialists, gymnasts, riders, charioteers, gladiators, bicyclists, roller skaters, leapers, and, in fact, all the champions from every land under the sun grouped in an unprecedented program, alone worth a dozen times the price of admission. Wait and watch for the most elaborate and resplendant street parade that has ever visited this city, at 10 a. m. on Thursday, August 1st. Special excursion rates will be issued on all lines of travel.

The Fatal Chivari.

On the 4th of July a wedding occured at Greenfield, Carleton county, and a number of young men assembled in the evening to hold a chivari. In the course of the demonstration one young man discharged a gun loaded with powder and paper wad, the latter striking and penetrating the left leg just below the thigh, of Calvin Kilpatrick, a young man 22 years old, with the sad result that he died on Thursday of last week.

There was a double wedding at Moses H. McDonald's, Northampton, Carleton county, last Tuesday evening. A chivari party assembled to honor the occasion; Fred. Cronkite was one of the party; the contents of a gun charged with powder and hard paper wads, lodged in Cronkite's left arm, shattering it so badly that at midnight the arm had to be amputated above the elbow.
