IN THOMPSON'S REMAINS

RE LAID TO REST IN HOLY CROSS CEMETERY, HALIFAX, ith a Pomp and Pagaentry Never Before Witnessed in Canada.

OVERNOR GENERAL, FIVE LT. GOVERNORS, AND PROMINENT POLITICIANS FROM ALL OVER THE DOMINION WALK IN THE FUNERAL PROCESSION,

Which Reached a Mile and a Half in Length.

ear's day, 1885, will be unique in y of Halifax. The snow of the in 1894 had turned to slush, rain eets all the day and it was one of thoroughly disagreeable of all the The time honored festivities were loned; for the first time in its f a century and a half the public s were heavily draped both outside business establishments and private s showed similar manifestations of and the whole city had clothed itself in mourning attire in honor of the memory of the late Sir John Thomsson, premier of Canada. H. M. S. Blenheim, bearing the remains of the departed statesman, dropped anchor opposite the ordnance at noon, but her arrival at the mouth of the harbor had been signalled an hour before.

When the booming of the minute guns of York redoubt and McNab's and George's Islands, announced thet the Blenheim was approaching the harbor, thousands of people wended their way to the wharves near the ordinance, to the buildings in the vicinity. It was raining hard as the ship came to anchor and the removal of the body was Postponed Till Two p. m.

In the meantime the officers in command invited the sons of the late premier on board. At the same time the transport Lily took out from the ordinance wharf Colonel Dudley North, chief of the staff, who was accompanied by Rev. Dr. Murphy, rector of St. Mary's cathedral, and Fr. Moriarty. Both priests boarded immediately on going aboard, and entering the mortuary chamber, the libra and accompanying prayers were read beside the body. Only the two sons of the premier were present with the priests at this brief service. The coffin was of mahogany with heavy gold handles. It was covered by the Canadian flag, and upon it rested the laurel wreath, still green and fresh, placed there by Her Majesty, and having the card in the Queen's handwriting attached.

The Body Landed.

At two o'clock again thousands of people returned to their places on the wharves, while the rain was falling more heavily than in the forenoon. To say that it was coming down in sheets is only to mildly describe it. If the weather within the memory of the oldest inhabitant had been sorted out, no more unpleasant sample for this season of the year could have been obtained than was experienced Tuesday. But the people were indifferent to it. Every feeling of personal inconvenience was lost in the deep regret which the death of Sir John Thompson had evoked in his native city. The crowds stood on the wharves, and were content to get drenched and chilled to their bones. After the transport Lily had been drawn up alongside the Blenheim, facing the ordnance, the firing of minute guns on the opposite side began. Then the ship's band was heard playing the dead march, and the coffin, still covered by the Canadian flag and bearing upon it the Queen's wreath and the crucifix, was lowered carfully over the side. Meanwhile the sides of the transport had been lined with marines from the Blenheim standing erect with reversed arms. The effect on the shore was magical. Heads were uncovered in the pouring rain, and the people pressed down to the edge of the wharves. Lord and Lady Aberdeen went to the utmost point on the landing at the ordnance yard and strained their eyes in the direction of the spectacle at the side of the ship.

The Music Floated in Over the Water

like the sobbing of the sea in the pelting rain. At fifteen minutes after two, the transport pushed away from the Blenheim's side and steamed slowly toward the ordnance yard. The guard of honor was drawn up and the officers stood at the landing ready. Senator Sanford and the two sons of the deceased premier were brought off on the transport. The moment the coffin had been landed it was transferred to the gun carriage, which was drawn by four powerful black horses. The horses were harnessed with leather trappings, covered with black and white; two of the horses had saddles, an artilleryman mounted on each animal, while two artillerymen were on the box. The procession to the province building formed, as follows:

Squad of military police.
Band of the King's regiment with drums draped.
Guard of honor with arms reversed
Lieutenant-General Montgomery Moore.
Officers of the staff.
Officers of the Canadian militia.
General public.

The route [illegible] sion from the ordnance [illegible] to the street entrance to the province was lined with the men of the 63rd rifles, who stood with arms reverse each side of the street was packed people. The procession marched to

The pictured were draped with crape louped back with black silk tassels and cord, the draping starting from black and silver spear heads. The ceiling resembled a canopy top, rising in a curve of pleted black cashmere, from the walls to the centre, the whole length of the chamber. The design of the cornice was retained by a broad band of silver cloth. The stem of the electroliers is draped in purple cashmere, the branches in crape.

The body rested on a catafalque against the double window, opposite what is usually the main entrance to the chamber. Above the catafalque was a canopy surmounted by the royal coat of arms. The canopy was in purple and black silk, trimmed and draped with silver lace and black tassels. Under the canopy was a candelabra of seven electric lights, and behind the three windows were draped in pleated purple and black. The platform upon which the catafalque rested was five inches from the floor. At the rear of that was an elevation for the reception of wreaths and floral tributes. The The corners of the chamber, opposite to the entrance and exit, were decorated appropriate plants, the finest ever seen in Halifax. The effect of the mournful decorations and emblems was heightened by over 100 extra electric lights. The floor was covered with purple.

Tuesday evening the remains of the late premier were removed to the residence of John Pugh, uncle of Lady Thompson, where the latter was staying, and the widow had a private watch with all that was left of her lamented husband. Wednesday morning the body was returned to the legislative council chamber where until ten o'clock that night. There was an awful crush of people to have a last look at the face of the dead, but they were disappointed; the embalming had been badly done, decomposition had set in and the face of the dead premier was not exposed to view.

The chamber was opened to the public at 8 o'clock. One of the earliest visitors of the day was Lady Aberdeen, who came alone. From early morning the crown on Hollis street seeking admission blocked the approach to the building. All day long from eight in the morning until midnight a procession of citizens and visitors passed through the province building, entering from Hollis street. The decorations of the council chamber have already been described, but several important additions were made to the floral tributes. The chief was an oval wreath five feet in diameter from the Queen. This wreath is framed on a background of holly and rare palms, and contains white flowers of various kinds. It was as fresh and bright as if made the day before. On a broad white silk ribbon is the inscription "A mark of deep regret and sincere respect from Victoria R. I."

The floral offering from the Dominion cabinet was in the form of a gigantic wreath measuring seven by six feet. Composing it were thousands of the finest flowers produced on the American continent. Messrs. Davison of Montreal, the makers were told to spare no expense, and the combination of calla lillies, roses, lillies of the valley, haycinthes, lium harrissi, and rare flowers with less familiar names, is beyond description. Hanging from the outside border of black cloth were seven wreaths measuring about twenty-six inches across. The cost of the offering was in the neighborhood of three or four thousand dollars.

At times during the day the crush of sightseers was tremendous, and it is said that 30,000 people visited the chamber during the day and evening.

There was universal disappointment that the casket could not be opened, as old friends of Sir John Thompson would have liked to see his face once more, even in death.

Only a few family connections were present when the casket was opened for the purpose of identification. Then it was sealed forever.

At 11 o'clock Wednesday night when the doors of the province building were closed there were yet hundreds seeking admission.

Lady Thompson and family were admitted to the council chamber at 11 o'clock for a last look at their dead husband and father.

The State Funeral.

Last Thursday was a memorable day in the century and a half of the history of Halifax. On no previous occasion have so many eminent people from abroad met in the town, and never before have so many Halifax people been on the streets. Nothing was wanting in the condition of weather, in the nunber and representative character of the participants, in the grandeur and circumstance, heartiness and solemnity of the demonstration, in the appropriateness of the religious services and the funeral oration, or in the military display, to make the occasion the greatest of its kind ever ever seen in this part of the world. Those who witnessed the funeral of Sir John Macdonald say that the procession was larger and that the presence of the military and naval forces gave it additional impressiveness.

Although the pontifical requiem mass in St. Mary's cathedral was not announced to commence before 9.30 o'clock, people who were not fortunate enough to secure tickets of admission began to gather in the vicinity of the edifice as early as 8.30 in the hope that they might Get Within the Building.

The cathedral was completely filled, and there was no confusion whatever. Among those present were Lord and Lady Aberdeen, General Montgomery Moore and staff, Judges Hannington, Barker and Landry, Premier Blair, Provincial Secretary Mitchell, Chief Commissioner of Public Works Emmerson, Mayor Robertson of St. John, and others from New Brunswick, all the Dominion Cabinet Ministers excepting Premier Bowell (who was indisposed), and Sir A. P. Caron and Hon. Angers.

Lady Thompson and family were seated in a purple enclosure to the left of the sanctuary. The curtains were drawn, and the party was not visible to those present in the body of the church.

The walls of the cathedral were hidden under waves of black drapery. White shields on different portions of the walls and pillars rendered the effect more solemn; 210 incandescent lamps remained lighted during the service. The floral offerings were placed near the coffin, which was covered by a white and gold pall sent by the Countess of Aberdeen. Very shortly after 10 o'clock the reverend master of ceremonies made his appearance in the sanctuary. Then the attendants and clergy came from the side chapel in procession. First came the altar boys, six in purple and black soutanes, two in red and 12 in black. These were followed by

Over 40 Priests,

Bishop McDonald, of Alexandria; Bishop McDonald, of P. E. I.; Bishop Sweeney, of St. John; Bishop Howley, of St. John's; Bishop Blois and Vicat Langlois, of Rimouski; Bishop Cameron, of Antigonish; Archbishop Bergin, of Quebec; Archbishop Duhamel, of Ottawa; and Archbishop O'Brien, of Halifax, in their gorgeous purple vestments. The train of his grace Archbishop O'Brien's silk robe was held by four pages in red soutanes.

The grand service of a requiem mass was chanted by the male singers. Prof. Currrie sang the solo Miserieum Mei in splendid voice. In fact the entire musical part of the service was magnificent. Prof. Compton, who acted as director, with comparatively short notice, prepared one of the grandest musical recitals ever heard in that city. The melody of the 85 voices could not have balanced better.

The requiem mass of the Roman Catholic church was celebrated by Bishop Cameron, of Antigonish, and Archbishop O'Brien preached the sermon from the text:

"Having then conversed with you from my youth until this day, behold here I am. Speak of me before the Lord, and before his annointed, whether I have taken any man's ox or ass; if I have wronged any man; If I have oppressed any man; if I have taken a bribe at any man's hand, and I will despise it this day and will restore it to you. And they said, thou hast not wronged us nor oppressed us, nor taken ought at any man's hand."—[I. Kings, cxii, 2, 3, 4].

The Archbishop preached an eloquent sermon, referring in eulogistic terms to the life and character of the deceased Premier.

At the close of the service a hymn, selected by Lord Aberdeen, was splendidly rendered:

Now the laborer's lask is o'er,
Now the battle day is past;
Now upon the farther shore,
Lands the voyager at last.
Father, most gracious, loving, kind,
Leave we now Thy servant sleeping.

This was the first verse, and so affected was Lord Aberdeen by its beautiful rendition, that tears were seen to spring to his eyes. At the conclusion of the requiem mass a number of black garbed soldiers conveyed the floral offerings from the car to the draped carriages prepared to carry them to the cemetery. The coffin was then tenderly taken by the soldiers and conveyed down the aisle to the funeral car. The mourners immediately followed. The congregation slowly followed it to the street, and as it was placed in the car all stood with bared heads.

The Funeral Car.

The funeral car was fourteen feet long by seven feet wide, and 17 feet high. The structure was beautifully covered with black silk and draped with black velvet, trimmed with silver fringe. It was of two stories. The first roof was seven feet above the platform, and the second four feet higher. The upper roof had a silver cross and crown and four 24 inch plumes. The upper roof is narrower than the lower, curving up something in the style of the mansard roof of a house. The coffin rested upon the first floor upon a catafalque 2 feet 6 inches high. Four Corinthian columns upheld the superstructure. The posts supporting the upper roof were festoned with artificial flowers.

The Procession.

The car was drawn by six draped horses, each being led by one of the undertaker's assistants in uniform.

The monster procession was formed in four sections, with Major Sherwood of the dominion police as chief marshal, as follows:

The Procession Moves.

Precisly at twelve mintes after the remains had been placed in the funeral car, the order to march was given, and what was the grandest procession ever seen in Canada was on its way to Holy Cross cemetery. As the procession moved off the bell of the cathedral commenced to toll and the big guns of the citadel and York Redoubt alternated with minute guns. It was a grand and impressive occasion; one never to be forgotten by those who witnessed it. All the bishops and clergymen were attired in their robes, the Blenheim's officers, marines and blue jackets, the Royal Artillery, the Royal Engineers, and militia were all out in full uniform. As the funeral car approached the people uncovered their heads. The car was escorted by a guard of honor of the 66th.

Soldiers were stationed all along the streets and kept the eager crowds back to the sidewalks. It is estimated that there were 60,000 people along the route to the grave. The procession was about a mile and a half in length. The start was made from the church at 12.05. It was after 1 o'clock before it reached the cemetery.

A massive black and gold gate in the form of an arch, was erected for the occasion at the cemetery. The sailors from the Blenheim dropped from the procession on South Park street, and as the others passed through, stood with uncovered heads. The band from the King's regiment was at the cemetery gate and marched ahead to the vault, around which were standing a guard of honor and several newspaper men. The casket was removed from the car and placed on a platform which had been erected over the vault. The service of the Roman Catholic church was said by the clergy, and all that was mortal of Canada's Premier was lowered with draped ropes into it's last resting place. Soon afterwards the crowds dispersed, the soldiers went back to their barracks, and all was over.

General Notes.

Premier Bowell was unable to attend the funeral because of a serious cold he had taken since coming to Halifax.

A Micmac chief and two other Indians in bead trimmed coats, took part in the procession.

It took the procession half an hour to pass a given point.

There were altogether six bands in the procession. The Blenheim's band played Beethoven's Dead March, the King's Liverpool regiment band the Dead March in Saul, and the Artillery band Nearer My God to Thee.

The public had two great disappointments. They did not see the face of the dead Premier; neither were they permitted to have a look at Sir Mackenzie Bowell, the present Premier.

A soldier was stationed at the door of the cathedral with signal flag, which he waved the moment the casket was brought out of the cathedral. His signal was in turn taken by another soldier stationed on the roof of the brigade office who repeated it to the citadel when the minute guns boomed out their salute.

Lady Thompson visited the cemetery before dusk Thursday evening and took a last look at the casket as it lay at the bottom of the vault. After the bereaved widow left, the floral offerings were placed on the casket, after which the wooden covering was placed over the top of the vault for the time being. The top of the vault has been covered with granite slabs and sealed.

The following were the floral tributes, drawn on the two wagons in the funeral procession: Queen Victoria, massive wreath; Lord and Lady Aberdeen, wreath of maple leaves; Marquis Ripon, wreath; Colonial Office, wreath; Lord Ripon, wreath; Lieut.-Governor Dewdney and Executive Council of British Columbia, cross; J. F. Stairs, M. P., roll of honor; Royal Military College, wreath and laurels and ribbons; Bar Society, cross; Liberal Conservative Association wreath of cycos of ribbons; Charitable Irish Society, harp; Y. M. L. A., wreath and monogram; Rod McDonald, broken wheel; Provincial Government, sheaf of wheat and sicle: Sir John A. Macdonald club, Montreal, wreath; Cartier club, Montreal, wreath in blue, roses; Sir Baden-Powell, wreath; Lady Marjorie, Lord Haddo, Hon. Dudley and Hon, Archie Gordon, anchor of white heather; U. S. Consul General, wreath; Lieut.-Governor MacKintosh, roll of honor, with inscription; Sussex, standing cross.
