POETRY.

MISCHIEF MAKERS.

Oh could there in this world be found
Some little spot of happy ground,
Where village pleasures might go round
Without the village tattling;
How doubly blest that place would be,
Where all may dwell in liberty,
Free from the bitter misery
Of gossips endless prattling.

If such a spot were really known,
Dame peace might claim it as her own
And in it she might fix her throne,
Forever and forever;
There like a Queen might reign and live,
While every one would soon forgive
The little slights they might receive,
And be offended never.

'Tis mischief-makers that remove
Far from our hearts that warmth of love,
And lead us all to disapprove
What gives another pleasure.
They seem to take one's part—but when
They've heard of our cares, unkindly then
They soon retail them all again,
Mixed with poisonous measure.

And then they've such a cunning way
Of telling ill-meant tales they say
"Don't mention what I say, I pray,
I would not tell another.
Straight to your neighbor's house they go
Narrating everything they know,
And break the peace of high and low,
Wife, husband, friend and brother.

Oh, that the mischief making crew
Were all reduced to one or two
And they were painted red or blue
That every one might know them.
Then would one village sure forget
To rage and quarrel, fume and fret,
And fall into an angry pet,
With things so much below them.

For its a sad, degraded part
To make another bosom smart,
And plant a dagger in the heart
We ought to love and cherish
Then let us evermore be found
In quietness with all around,
While friendship, joy and peace around,
And angry feelings perish!

VARIETY.

A Trap for a Miser.—The picture representing the sale of a quantity of old furniture seized for rent was exhibited some years back in the window of a dealer in the Place de la Madeline, Paris, and attracted considerable attention. In the foreground was placed a poor woman holding in her arms a child, and watching with a sorrowful eye the progress of the sale. The sweet face of the child stood out in strong contrast to the distressed countenance of the poor mother. Further back were the personages connected with the sale, represented with great vigor. The following is stated by a Lyons journal to be the history of the scene depicted:—

"A few years since, the painter of the picture in question, an eminent artist in Lyons, approached a great number of persons who were gathered together witnessing the sale of the furniture of a poor woman.

A woman was seated upon the pavement with a child in her arms. The painter spoke to her and was told the furniture belonged to her; that her husband had lately died, leaving her with the child she had in her arms; that she had struggled hard to maintain herself by working day and night, and submitted to every privation, but that her landlord had at length seized her furniture for some months' rent, which was due him.

The artist was much affected by this recital, and inquired who was her landlord. "There he is," replied the woman, pointing to a man who was watching the progress of the sale; and he was recognized by the painter as a person who had amassed considerable fortune by usury, so that to make any appeals on behalf the poor widow would be useless. The artist was considering within himself what other plan he could adopt to benefit her, when the crier announced a picture for sale. It was a miserable daub, which in the summer the poor woman used to hide the hole through which the pipe of the stove passed during the winter. It was put up at one franc.

The artist at once conceived a plan for taking revenge of the landlord. He went over, examining the picture with great attention, and then called forth with a loud voice,

"One hundred francs!"

The landlord was astounded at the bid, but conceiving that a picture which so eminent an artist could offer that sum was worth more than double, offered two hundred francs.

"Five hundred!" said the painter, and the contest between the two bidders became so animated that the prize was at length knocked down to the landlord at two thousand and two hundred francs!

The purchaser then addressing the painter, said,—

"In seeing an artist of your merit bid so eagerly for the picture, I supposed that it must be very valuable. Now tell me, sir, what do you estimate its value."

"About three francs and a half," replied the painter; "but I would not give that for it."

"You are surely jesting," said the landlord, "for you bid as high as two thousand one hundred francs for it."

"That is true," replied the artist, "and I will tell you why I did so. You, in the possession of an income of twenty-five thousand francs a year, have siezed upon the furniture of a poor woman for a debt of two hundred francs. I wished to give you a lesson, and you fell into a trap. Instead of the poor woman being your debtor, she is now your creditor, and I flatter myself you will not compel her to seize on your furniture for the debt."

"The artist then politely saluted the astonished landlord, and having announced her good fortune to the good woman, he walked away."

A Chinese Street Artist.—A man seated on the pavement holds in his hand a white porcelain tile, about a foot square. This he overspreads with a deep blue colour, from a sponge dipped in a thin paste of indigo, and asks us to make a flower. I suggest the lotus. He extends his forefinger—most remarkable forefinger, crooked, flexible as an elephant's trunk, and as sharp as if the end had been whittled off—gives three or four quick dashes across the tile, and in ten seconds or less, lo! there is the flower, exquisitely drawn and shaded, its snowy cup hanging in the midst of its long swaying leaves. Three more strokes, and a white bird, with spring wings, hovers over it; two more and a dog stands beside it. The rapidity and precision of that forefinger seems almost miraculous. He covers the tile with new layers of color, and flower after flower is dashed out of the blue ground.

The Image of his Father.—On the birth of the seventh son all the women come rushing to see the infant and congratulate the happy parent upon the event. Our friend anticipated the visit and instead of having the child prepared for it, made the servant bring in a little lap dog and dressed it up in swaddling clothes and covering up its face he laid it in the place the real child should have occupied.

The ladies were introduced into the apartment and gently approaching the bed the coverings were turned down and a portion of the face of the little pretended new comer was exposed.

"Bless my soul!" said one of the ladies, "what a remarkable child."

"So very interesting!" said the second.

"And so good natured!" observed the third, as she commenced toying with it.

"And how very like his father!" remarked the fourth.

They were all struck with the observation, and exclaimed:—

"The very image of his father!"

The flattered parent rushed out of the room convulsed with laughter leaving the women to discover their mistake.
