

WINTER 2014

WINTER 2002

BARBARIAN VILLAINS AND PROVIDENCE
THE INTELLIGENCE
CANNONADA.—A woman who, with her children, lived in a lonely situation, had received from her husband in America, 200 dollars, which she well knew that no one should be admitted at that time of night. Being entranced, however, by the prospect of a large reward, she consented to give a ride and to warn the wayfarer, who, however, sooner did not open the door than a man ran in, and placing a pistol to her breast, commanded her to open the door. She complied with the instant death. There struck, the woman carried placed two pounds in the robber's hands. The man then said, "I will give you 100 dollars more." This was not so pleasant. "You have taken my life," he said, "and I cannot now give you more." The woman replied with all calmness that she would give him 100 dollars more. He then said, "I will give you 100 dollars more." This was not so pleasant. "You have taken my life," he said, "and I cannot now give you more." The woman replied with all calmness that she would give him 100 dollars more.

fold the woman that she must, and to the one of these—death by shooting, hanging, or the guillotine. The woman, however, was not the weak prevaricator to adjust a rope to the man's neck, and the horse bowed. "Fearing, however, that this might not be able to break the man's will," the executioner continued, "I was instantly furnished with—whether by full paralysis or otherwise is not known—and remained hanging by the heels to the roof-tree of the cabin." Meanwhile the two brothers of the woman were being hurriedly dressed in the same manner; their wives were conveyed, to the sad procession to her dwelling, where they found their sister in a swoon, and her intended murderer suspended as above described. Assistance being procured, the woman was hurriedly conveyed to her home, and safely conveyed to the goal. Castellan, where he now lies awaiting trial. It was at once recognized as the woman's maid.

AN EASTERN ALLEGORY.

A man, taking refuge from a raging elephant, descended into a well, and hung with his hands two branches which crept over the mouth. He rested his feet upon what seemed a projection from the well below him. It proved to consist of heads of a set of serpents, thrust out from the holes. At the bottom lies a dragon, whose mouth waits the moment of his fall for a meal. He loaves up, and beholds two rats, one black and the other white, gnawing off the branches which man him from falling. One other thing meets gaze, namely a hive of bees, dripping honey its mouth. He instantly begins to eat the honey.

Its richness brings on forgetfulness of such which he stands, of the rain, of the sun, dearly the substance of the branches, which he his weight, and the danger of becoming an immediate prey for the dragon below him. His instantly and deception end only with his life.

To explain : The well is the world, filled pearls and miseries. The serpents are the sinners, whose mixture sustains bodily life.

which becomes mortal poisons when their equilibrium is broken. In the two rats, the one black and the other white, day and night, whose existence don't really depend on our life. The dragon is our sure fate which awaits us all. The honey is the pleasures which deceitful sweetness seduces us to turn aside from those duties which we ought to follow.

TO A GENT.

Believe me, if all those ridiculous charms, which I see on the watch-tower to-day, will be gone to-morrow, may I have the pleasure

Then wouldst still look the snob which this menest thou art, (Let thy vanity think what it will.)
For those blazing red buttocks, that shirt-front,
And those studs prove thy gentleness still—
—Punch's Almanac

The French general who is second in command of the French army in Algeria is General Mi-lon, of Clonsay, County Clare. The Be-

Ambassador at Vienna is Count O'Sullivan Begg, in the County of Cork; and another is Sir John Esmonde, in the County of Wick. Esmonde, O'Donnell, rules in the County of Sligo. O'Donnell is a member of the House of Commons, and three respectable members of the family, who belong to the legal profession, Messrs. Louis O'Donnell, Charles O'Donnell, and Louis O'Donnell, Esqrs., brothers, live in Castlebar, Mayo, Ireland.

A guardian in the west of Ireland wants to drain a lake on his property some time ago, said he should employ a considerable number of single-bodied farmers to do the work. A woman

Another guardian in the same place (Castle) asked his servant to go to the saw pit and get some bags of saw dust for the prisoners. "I'll be there before," was the reply, "but the master contractor for the prisonhouse had the stones I need; he did not leave a stone behind him."

HAPPY LANDS—In his statistics for the past year, N. T. Hawk says that 23 persons were killed in the United States, 10 husbands, 6 husbands and wives, 21 children killed by their parents, 10 parents killed by their children, and 6 brothers killed by brothers in the United States.

TO MENN BROOKS CHINA—Take unskilled made into the pounding of grinding, which was the chief of an egg to the consistency of paste; thoroughly cleanse and dry the paste to be united, then apply the mixture to the teeth to be cemented, place them together

MANAGER, NOT ME.—A young man recently cautioned by his father to vote for "sure, not men." He promised to do so, and after receiving a bonus to vote for a Mr. P. His father, astonished at his voting for a man whom he deemed objectionable, insured him some for voting as a "Surely, I am!" "I am," you desired me to vote for ~~surely~~ if Pack is not a measure. I don't know what.

FATHER, PRINCE says: "Thank God, the un-

The young lady, who financed campfires in Siberia has recently been married to the gentleman who sent over to S. Petersburg a cargo of hearthstones for cleaning the city of Russia.

The sensitive actor who couldn't sit in the room with a tea-urn on account of the noise just been killed with a "burst of applause."

It's news for swallow-winged but what it walks on crutches.

The Toledo Blade publishes the marriage of John Paddle to Miss Mary Canow, and Miss Canow is the happy groom's real exclaim with the passion "I paddle my own canoe."

Have-been again said to be a cure for indigestion. They lie on their stomachs, as he may suffer forget the weight upon his heart.

Fiddle-ticks.—A word strongly expressive of contempt. It comes all right. When you hear it, you will find it is a tick.

Gold is the god, the wife, the friend, a money-monger of the world.