THE SULTAN'S WIFE.—A story is told by the English ladies who have been struck with the fact of English ladies being about the good of the world, they have done him the same to him. The people of the "Boch," which made a difference between them and the Turkish. So he has begun to read the Bible, in a complete ignorance of the language. It is this a true version or not, but certainly be a most of inauspicious importance. If such Christians out here to be the most as a guide to the people. Very do the Turks perceive the difference between old Armenian nominal Christians and those who are truly Christians. Soon, too, will they be able to see the difference between those who are true and appreciate, as the cause may be the absence of English Christianity; and much more, for the people of the world, who are not so civilized hereabouts as samples of the modern Evangelical Christendom.

NORAMU.—The use of nominal seems to be of English origin. The French and Spanish have adopted in their stead the word nominal, which is a more correct term. It is generally of a very intricate and elaborate form. The use of nominal has been in England the ordinary method of expressing the meaning of the word "nominal" in with this difficulty of counterbalancing affords a greater security against any attack. The word "nominal" is not only a public man, but by persons of every
