ANOTHER MONARCHY THREATENED.

The effect of Norway's example upon Hungary is being watched with anxiety by the continental diplomats to whom the growth of the independence sentiment in the latter state and the great opportunity now in the hands of those who favor a separation from Austria, is causing much disquiet.

The governmental system of Austria-Hungary—two parliaments owing allegiance to a common king—is markedly similar to that of Norway-Sweden and the causes for friction are even greater.

The Hungarian people have always been animated by a strong and deep desire for an independent national life, as the revolution of 1848 certifies, and this, quickened again by the complicated political conditions in the dual monarchy's easy escape from similar bonds, threatens to burst out anew into action—armed if necessary—that may bring freedom.

At present there is an absolute deadlock between the Hungarian parliament and the king which can apparently have no solution except the complete surrender of one or the other or a separation. In the general elections, in January, the government, under Premier Tisza, which was favorable to the union and submission to the king was overwhelmingly routed, and there came into existence the combined opposition of today, the "independence party."

The party is composed of various minor factions with various programmes and tendencies, but all united over one bone of contention—the military demands—the use of the Hungarian language and the Hungarian flag in the army in Hungary.

These demands the crown has peremptorily and convincingly refused, and the newly elected parliamentary majority had to choose between relinquishing its principles or abandoning its prospects of power. It decided to hold to its principles, and it is apparently as firm in its demands as the crown is in its refusal of them.

So the king refused to allow the majority to form a government and has retained the Tisza ministry in power in spite of its protest. Meanwhile the Hungarian parliament is an ineffectual body. The ministry is discredited, the premier powerless, and legislation is impossible. The country is without responsible government, and there are important matters ahead of the dual monarchy which require the co-operation of the Hungarian parliament for their fulfilment.

For four months Hungary has been without any constitution, and as the direct imposts under the budget do not have to be paid until this bill is passed the income of the country is falling off alarmingly. Attempts of the crown to collect these payments by force, in default of the parliamentary legislation, would cause outbreaks of violent resistance and disorder. The yearly recruiting bill also has not been passed and as the matter stands today the common army will soon have to go short of its regular yearly quota of men from Hungary, or the crown will have to adopt one of two measures, first, to retain in the service the men whose time expires this year, or second, to attempt to get recruits from the various Hungarian counties without the sanction of parliament. Both of these measures would be unconstitutional and their enforcement would undoubtedly cause forcible resistance.

It is apparent that this condition is intolerable for any length of time. And in a distant at least, it looks as if parliament held the whip hand. No state can go on indefinitely without soldiers and with greatly reduced financial and if the Hungarian parliament persists in its stand the king will undoubtedly have to submit or take some action which will directly provoke a revolt.

A STATESMAN GONE. In John Hay, secretary of State in the United States government, the American people lose a man who combined sanity, sagacity and strength in more perfect proportions than any other in American public life.

While he, more than any other, has been responsible for the American imperialism, for the total reversal of the policy of the founders of the republic, he has accomplished his work so wisely, so carefully—though never lacking in firmness—that he has won general confidence at home and wide esteem abroad. So strong was this confidence that it mitigated to a considerable degree the alarm felt by many when Theodore Roosevelt was first pithforked by Fate into the presidential chair and all through the strenuous one's term of office, Mr. Hay has been, in the popular mind, the brake which was necessary to keep the Rooseveltian energy within safe and sane bounds.

Moreover Mr. Hay was a gentleman, an accomplished scholar and a writer who has left works that will be ranked among the American classics. His "Pike County Ballads" and "Little Breaches" alone place him in the first rank of literary men.

His life has been a busy and useful one. A trusted assistant of Lincoln, he has since served his country well in many high offices including that of Ambassador to Great Britain. However, his statesmanship while chief cabinet minister under McKinley and Roosevelt constitutes his greatest claim to a place in history. How high that place will be will depend largely upon the results of the policy he inaugurated and those cannot be judged for maybe a century yet.

SIR WILFRID'S PRETENSES. It is a good thing that parliament did not go so far as to impose dual languages upon the Northwest, though there was the same constitutional reason for this coercion as for the imposition of separate schools. Sir Wilfrid pleaded in the language case that the constitution did not call for two languages and that he did wish to impair the liberty of the new provinces more than the constitution required. Yet the premier has caused to be applied to the school system everything in the British North America act that bears upon the issue of separate schools.

The meeting is this. Sir Wilfrid agreed to impose separate schools upon the new provinces. He has done it in spite of the constitution which speaks against the constitution for his justification. Dual language coercion in the west was not part of the Laurier deal, and he appeals to the constitution against it. Sir Wilfrid is simply playing the hypocrite in the whole matter, as has been abundantly proved.

VACATION TIME IS HERE. The glad vacation time has come, the books are laid away.

Sweet Willie's face is wreathed in smiles, he laughs through all the day. His teacher's trunk is packed and she will spend the summer by the sea. And probably sometimes contrive to be a little gay.

Vacation time! O season of the long expected joy! O blessings on you, little girl and happy hearted boy! My neighbor's daughters are full grown.

And there is nothing that I own which they are rolling around my damage or my sorrow.

HUNDREDS SAW THREE DROWN. NEW YORK, July 2.—Two unknown men and a woman were drowned by the upsetting of a row boat off Brighton Beach yesterday. Hundreds of promenade on the board walk were thrown into great excitement and many fainter when they saw the empty boat which had been swamped by the heavy sea from shore.

Several men swam to the boat and vainly attempted to recover the bodies of the victims. Their identity is still a mystery. The boat which was a first bottomed green painted scow and was the property of alderman Fred Lundy and his brother. According to them an elderly man and a young woman and young man rented the scow in the morning and said they would spend the day fishing. They were well dressed and paid for the boat and some fishing bait before leaving the Lundy boat for Sheepshead bay.

Mr. and Mrs. McParlane left by train for a tour of American cities.

The officers at camp Sussex are very much annoyed over the report that smallpox had broken out among the men. The only thing that could have given rise to such a rumor was the fact that a patient had been removed to the hospital suffering from a very mild attack of the measles. The patient's name is Duplessis.

A meeting of the members of the City Laborers' Union will be held at their rooms, Berryman's Hall, Princess street, this evening, to receive the report of the financial secretary, payment of dues and the consideration of matters of very great importance in connection with the union.
