AYER'S SARSAPARILLA,

FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.

This compound of the vegetable alteratives, Sarsaparilla, Dock, Stillingia, and Mandrake with the Iodides of Potash and Iron, makes a most effectual cure of a series of complaints which are very prevalent and afflicting. It purifies the blood, purges out the lurking humors in the system that undermine health and settle into troublesome disorders. Eruptions of the skin are the appearance on the surface of humors that should be expelled from the blood. Internal derangements are the determination of these same humors to some internal organ, or organs, whose action they derange, and whose substance they disease and destroy. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA expels these humors from the blood. When they are gone, the disorders they produce disappear, such as Ulceration of the Liver, Stomach, Kidneys, Lungs, Eruptions and Eruptive diseases of the skin St. Anthony's Fire, Sores or Erysipelas, Pimples Pustules, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Tetter and Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Ulcers and Sores, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Pain in the Bones, Side and Head, Female Weakness, Sterility, Leucorrhœa arising from internal ulceration and uterine diseases, Dropsy, Dyspepsia, Emaciation and General Debility. With their departure health returns.

oct25 BARBOUR BROS.

Mr. Sherman, Secretary of State, was unable to attend the Parnell meeting at Washington, but he wrote:—

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Jan. 19.

PROF. THOS. ANTISELL, Chairman, etc.

—Dear Sir:—I regret very much that an engagement made before the receipt of your kind invitation to attend the proposed meeting of American citizens to make arrangements for the relief of the suffering poor of Ireland on Tuesday next, will not allow me to be present; but I heartily sympathize with you in the objects of your meeting, and will cheerfully contribute my share for that purpose. Such an appeal is never made in vain in this country. It comes with especial force from Ireland, whose sons have contributed so largely to our material development, and to the defence and honor of the United States in peace and in war in every stage of our history. Such an appeal made now, when this country enjoys unexampled plenty and prosperity, ought to be and will be responded to with generous liberality, and necessarily will excite a lively interest in the causes, near and remote, of the periodical recurrence of great destitution among the poorer classes of Ireland.

It may not be amiss for me to state my view of the principal causes of the destitution which now appeals so strongly to every generous mind. They are (1) the almost entire dependence of the population upon agriculture; (2) the precariousness and insecurity of the tenure of land by the cultivators of the soil; and (3) the total want of control by the people of Ireland over its own revenue, power, and resources, greatly aggravated by the non-residence of a large portion of the owners of the soil.

While in England about two-thirds of the population are dependent on manufactures and commerce, in Ireland, on the other hand, about nine-tenths of the population are dependent on agriculture. The cause of this utter dependence of the Irish people upon agriculture is familiar to every reader of English and Irish history. I will briefly refer to one branch of Irish manufacturing industry, and the history of its systematic suppression, as an instance of the methods by which Ireland was prevented from becoming a rich and self-dependent commercial country. So far back as the beginning of the 14th century we find that the Irish woollen manufactures were in high request not only throughout the British islands, but on the continent of Europe, and especially in Italy, a country whose fabrics had attained an advanced state of perfection. In an act of the reign of Queen Elizabeth special reference is made to the prosperity of the Irish woollen trade; and in the reign of William the Third the Lords and Commons of England addressed that monarch on the same subject in this extraordinary language, after detailing their grievances against the prosperous condition of the trade in Ireland:—"Wherefore, we most humbly beseech your most sacred Majesty, that your Majesty would be pleased, in the most public and effectual way that may be, to declare to all your subjects of Ireland that the growth and increase of the woollen manufacture there has long been, and will be ever, looked upon with great jealousy by all your subjects of this kingdom, and if not timely remedied may occasion very strict laws totally to prohibit and suppress the same."

It is not less extraordinary that so enlightened and courageous a ruler as William the Third should promptly reply to this address that "he would do all that in him lay to discourage the woollen manufacture of Ireland." The calamitous results of this fatal policy are familiar to the world.

The same policy was pursued in dealing with the American colonies; so that the illustrious Lord Chatham, though strongly opposing taxation in America, said that the power of Parliament extended in the colonies to the prohibition of their carrying a hat to market over the line of one province into another; or to breaking down a loom in the most distant corner of the British empire in America; and if this power were denied, "I would not," said he, "permit them to manufacture a lock of wool, or form a horse-shoe, or a hob-nail."

This unwise monopoly of manufactures by the parent government was one of the causes which led to the American Revolution.

A still graver cause of the misfortunes of Ireland is the want of fixity of tenure by the cultivators of the soil. This is an evil so extensive in its ramifications, and so fatal to industry and happiness, that a mere recital of the train of disastrous consequences that attend it would occupy too much of your time, and extend too greatly the length of this letter. Under it, the more industrious the tenant is the harder does his lot become; for, instead of being allowed to enjoy the fruits of his industry, he is subjected to a burden-some tax on it, in the form of a periodical raising of the rent for every improvement he makes; and if he protest against this spoliation, he is liable to be forthwith dispossessed of his holding, and his only remedy is in emigration. Even the opponents of land reform in Ireland acknowledge that this is a crying evil; and their foremost organ and exponent, the Tory Quarterly Review, of London, used this language on the subject a few years ago:

"We would go one step further (than Lord Clarendon), and admit that to eject an unoffending and paying tenant from a homestead or farm which he has held for years, and whereon probably his parents had lived before him, and to which, therefore, he had contracted a natural attachment,—and thus to eject him from pure caprice or greediness, even where full compensation for actual improvements is given,—is a harsh, cruel, and unrighteous proceeding, and in the Irish mind is sure to be regarded as injustice and oppression, and to be resented as such."

No serious attempt has yet been made by the British Parliament to deprive the landlords of this exorbitant power. Liberal statesmen and publicists have advocated various remedies for the acknowledged wrong; but the Legislature has adopted none of them. The Right Hon. John Bright advocates their buying up by Government of the estates of absentee landlords, who might be willing to sell, by means of money borrowed at three and one half per cent, and lending this to tenants who are anxious to become proprietors of their holdings at 6 or 6½ per cent., for a certain number of years, till they had repaid principal as well as interest.

The late John Stuart Mill discussed the question with the candor, thoroughness, and ability which might have been expected from that eminent and courageous thinker, and in language far more forcible than I, as an American citizen, would feel at liberty to employ. He said:—

"It is not to fear of consequences, but to a sense of right, that one would wish to appeal on this most momentous question. Yet it is not impertinent to say that to hold Ireland permanently by the old bad means is simply impossible. Neither Europe nor America would now bear the sight of a Poland across the Irish Channel. Were we to attempt it, and a rebellion, so provoked, could hold its ground but for a few weeks, there would be an explosion of indignation all over the civilized world; on this single occasion Liberals and Catholics would be unanimous; Papal volunteers and Garibaldians would fight side by side against us for the independence of Ireland, until the many enemies of British prosperity had time to complicate the situation by a foreign war. Were we even able to prevent a rebellion, or suppress it the moment it broke out, the holding down by military violence of a people in desperation, constantly struggling to break their fetters, . . . could not long succeed with a country so vulnerable as England, having territories to defend in every part of the globe, and half her population dependent on foreign commerce. . . .

Too much bitter feeling still remains between England and the United States, more than eighty years after separation; and Ireland has suffered from England, for many centuries, evils compared with which the greatest grievances of the Americans were, in all but their principle, insignificant. . . . America is the country with which we are in most danger of having serious difficulties; and Ireland would be far more likely to confederate with America against us than with us against America. . . .

If, without removing this (land-tenure) difficulty, we attempt to hold Ireland by force, it will be at the expense of all the character we possess as lovers and maintainers of free government, or respecters of any right except our own; it will most dangerously aggravate all our chances of misunderstandings with any of the great powers of the world, culminating in war; we shall be in a state of open revolt against the universal conscience of Europe and Christendom, and more and more against our own. And we shall in the end be shamed, or, if not shamed, coerced into releasing Ireland from the connection; or we shall avert the necessity only by conceding with the worst grace, and when it will not prevent some generations of ill blood, that which, if done at present, may still be in time permanently to reconcile the two countries."

Mr Mill's remedy was the institution by Parliament of a commission to examine immediately every farm which is let to a tenant, and commute the present variable for a fixed rent; to ascertain in each case what annual payment would be an equivalent to the landlord for the rent he now receives—provided that rent be not excessive—and for the present value of whatever prospect there may be of an increase, from any other source than the peasant's own exertions; to secure this annual sum to the landlord under the guarantee of the state, with the option of receiving it directly from the national treasury, by being inscribed as the owner of console sufficient to yield the amount; by which means, to use his own words, "every farm not farmed by the proprietor would become the permanent holding of the existing tenant, who would pay either to the landlord or to the state the fixed rent which had been decided upon; or less, if the income which it was thought just that the landlord should receive were more than the tenant could reasonably be required to pay. The benefit, to the cultivator, of a permanent property in the soil does not depend on paying nothing for it, but on the certainty that the payment cannot be increased."

I have cited thus at length from this liberal and philosophical statesman, because his treatment of the question probes the wounds of Irish discontent and destitution, and is the most exhaustive and dispassionate of any that I have met with.

Who can doubt that if the existing land tenure in Ireland, so eloquently depicted by such statesmen as Bright and Mill, were so modified as to secure a fixed tenure to the cultivators of the soil in harmony with justice to the proprietors, and proper encouragement were given to manufactures and commerce, securing a greater diversity of labor and production, the Emerald Isle would yield food enough and employment enough to make happy homes where now want and destitution prevail? If the resources of Ireland were thus developed and diversified, the suffering which now follows each partial failure of crops could be averted; but under the present policy the country must, as during the famine years of 1846-49, be content to see, every day, scores of steamships and sailing vessels, laden with provisions, leave the Irish ports while the people are famishing by the wayside. Ireland has an uncommonly fertile soil and a people noted for their laborious industry; it is rich in minerals, containing gold, silver, copper, lead, coal and sulphur; its quarries yield the most beautiful marble and excellent slates, while its lakes and rivers abound with every variety of edible fish. All power over these sources of wealth and revenue was transferred by the act of legislative union to the parliament in London. While it is the duty, as I am sure it is the desire, of the citizens of our free and prosperous country to render to the Irish people all aid in their distress, it is equally our right and duty to express the hope that either by the action of the British Parliament, or, what is better, by a free concession to the Irish people of "home rule," they may, by wise legislation, be released, so far as human laws can release them, from the causes and sources of their present suffering.

Very respectfully,
JOHN SHERMAN.
