JAMES STEPHENS' VIEWS.

He Wants Ireland and England to be Sisters and Invincible.

A reporter of a Parisian Anglo-American journal, The Morning News, lately waited on Mr. James Stephens at his house in Paris for the purpose of obtaining his views on men and things, more particularly to obtain a sketch of the work on which Mr. Stephens is engaged. The following is a report of the interview together with the writer's impression of the former Head Centre. It will be interesting to Irish and Irish-American readers to observe how different the Stephens of '64 is from the Stephens of '83. This one believes that "the glory of Ireland will come from England," while that one was convinced that the only chance of salvation for Ireland was to cut the connection at once and for ever:

James Stephens, the ex-Pontiff of Fenianism, now leads the quiet life of a French bourgeois, rather than that of an Irish patriot of the fire-eating school. There is an air of command about the battered careworn face and the broad expansive forehead cannot fail to strike the visitor when he is ushered into the plainly-furnished apartment, which, with its books and papers, appears the home of a student, and a poor one.

The work upon which Mr. James Stephens is now busily engaged, and which must necessarily furnish some interesting historical memoirs, was the chief cause of yesterday's interview between the representative of the Morning News and the most prominent Irishman now in Paris. The conversation which took place at No. 8 Rue Lebon, aux Ternes, will be given almost verbatim, as it refers to points connected with the events of the hour, and shows the grave difference which exists between the stubborn and veteran rebel and his imitators.

"What is your opinion of the societies and associations now in existence in Ireland and America?"

"If you mean secret societies, I can only tell you that they do not exist on the other side of the Atlantic. The Clan-na-Gael has become merged into Parnellism. I know a good deal of associations organized for the good of my country. They always start on straight lines, but shortly afterwards an advanced schism is formed within the society which only embarrasses and compromises it. Look at O'Donovan Rossa. Is he not a living example of what I say? How many followers do you think such a man has?

"But what about the Invincibles?"

"Take my word for it, their deeds are only isolated acts of terrorism; and those acts all Irishmen, with a scrap of conscience within them, must disapprove of. I thank God that I have never been mixed up with any deed of secret vengeance or blood-shedding. I object to crime individually, and I abhor criminal societies, which, after all, are only the collective expression of individual crime.

"But were not you yourself the associate of Mazzini, Bakoumine, and other prominent leaders of secret societies?"

"Not in the sense of being afflicted with them. After my escape from the Richmond Bridewell I came to Paris. My position towards the Imperial Government was a strange one. I may tell you now that the same policy was followed with me as with Mazzini. I was kept as a reserve factor, Mizzini connected Napoleon III. with Italy. I was always on hand if—and remember it was not impossible—the Emperor went to war with England. I shall probably refer to episodes in this part of my career in the work I am preparing for publication, and which, depend upon it, will be more authentic than than of Mr. Rutherford, which, upon careful reading, I look upon as absolutely fantastic."

"You know that the American bishops have been summoned to Rome. Do you think that they will go back with instructions, and do you think those instructions will be obeyed?"

"I think this: The Pope and the American bishops have no standpoint in Irish affairs. If they interfere they lose their dignity, for the Vatican is wrongly informed. When I framed the rules of the Fenian Brotherhood, I remembered that all or nearly all my fellow countrymen were Catholics; and I was careful to avoid all chance of anathema. There are no signs and passwords in Fenianism. The only secrecy is that of a business association with a fixed object which does not reveal its private affairs to the world. There are plenty of large commercial houses which supply ammunition confidentially to different Governments. Are they secret societies? I would challenge the Pope and all the Cardinals to find a canonical offence in any of the unwritten statutes of Fenianism, for I may tell you at once that the chief statutes are merely the observance of the rules of common sense."

"Have you a programme for Ireland?"

"No. I live isolated and free. I see little or nothing of the men who have fought by my side. I have not much confidence in the average Irish patriot of to-day. He is, as a rule, a great boaster with little in him, except a limited power of mischief. But my dream of the future is that the glory of Ireland will come from England. The Republican idea is taking deep root there. I honestly believe that men like Mr. Chamberlain, Mr. Labouchere and (with a pause) yes, I say it unhesitatingly, Sir Charles Dilke, may yet be the saviours of Ireland by their Republicanism, which must develop. Ireland may one day rise in rebellion. But England, Scotland and Wales have plenty of Republicanism over their borders. A United Federal Republic is the most practical way of remedying the wrongs of Ireland. Remember, I say not one word against Mr. Parnell, who is a thoroughly honest patriot, although he believes that an English House of Parliament may do justice to the sister country. Even Catholicism [illegible] and she will be wise. She has tried the experiment of walking hand-in-hand with a Republic in America. She may do so therefore elsewhere."

As regards agitation generally Mr. Stephens said: "The hearty rising, the spontaneous outburst of patriotic feeling cannot fail to help the cause; but I want to hear no more about so-called 'Invincibles.' I want England and Ireland to be sisters, and together they could hold their own against the whole world."

The "Black Flags."

THEY EAT THE HEARTS AND LIVERS OF THEIR ENEMIES TO MAKE THEM BRAVE.

(From a Hong Kong Letter.)

To-day, I met Major-General Mesny of the Imperial Chinese army, just arrived from Yuman, where he had an opportunity to observe much of interest concerning the recent operations in Tonquin. He is well informed in regard to Chinese affairs. He has spent fifteen years out of twenty-five travelling through the interior, chiefly in an official capacity. He was ordered from the Mongolian province to Yuman to assist the viceroy, in consequence of his perfect knowledge of the French language. He is a native of the island of Jersey. He is now en route for Foochow to take charge of the naval arsenal. He wears the Chinese costume, with a queue, and speaks the Chinese language fluently. While in Yuman two of his men spent a month in the Black Flag camp. He also met the chief who holds a commission in the Chinese army. The Black Flags received exaggerated reports of the French losses at Hanoi, but correct reports concerning the Chinese losses [illegible] my despatches. He says that if prisoners fall into the hands of the Black Flags they will be reserved for torture, but the bodies of the dead will not be found, as the Chinese believe that eating the flesh of ferocious men makes them brave, especially the heart and liver. Therefore, they are accustomed to eat their enemies. The Black Flags are strongly addicted to this habit—they even eat their own people who die by accident on the march. This may account for the ill success which attended the search for the bodies of Riviere and his followers whose heads alone were found on the last sortie by Gen. Bouet. He regards fighting the Black Flags as fighting the Chinese army on a small scale. The Chinese undoubtedly furnish arms, ammunition and men to perpetuate the harassing war upon the French at Tonquin. The French originally made such a bugbear of the Black Flags that the Chinese considered it worth their while to keep up their hostile organization by a subsidy as long as they continued the war with the French. At that time they numbered only 1500 fighting men; now they can put 3000 men in the field and still garrison the strongholds. My informant considers the Black Flags to be the best and bravest branch of all the Chinese soldiers. He has no doubt that France would conquer China if she made war in the same way as with a European power, but as she wars in Tonquin she must suffer defeat and disgrace. In the city of Canton everything is apparently quiet. Six war ships help to preserve order. The Palos has gone to Formosa. The viceroy has about 10,000 troops in the city to curb any attempts at rebellion fomented by the secret societies.

The Blood of the Howards.

THE LITTLE BLIND HEIR TO ALL THEIR TITLES AND ESTATES.

The little Earl of Arundel is to be carried now to the shrine of Caravaggio, where prayers for the recovery of his sight are to be offered. We know of nothing at once more pitiful and interesting than the case of this four-year old heir of all the titles, estates and fame of the great Howard family. Its chief title is from that rough diamond, Roger Bigod, Earl of Norfolk, who, when choleric Edward I., urging him to a distateful adventure, cried, "Sir Earl, you shall either go or hang!" stoutly replied: Sir King, I will neither go nor hang!" and forthwith raised an army of revolt so imposing that the King sought a reconciliation. In reality the Bigods had lost the title and were almost forgotten, when the Dukedom of Norfolk and its hereditary Earl Marshalship passed over to the Mowbrays, and thence became centred in the person of a young woman, together with the estates and titles of the Fitz-Alans, Earls of Arundel, early in the fiteenth century. This girl, the heiress, and sole representative of two great lines, was wedded to a smart young knight of Yorkshire, Sir Robert Howard, the head of a family who had more wealth than blood. It was the son of this marriage, John Howard, who rode in high favor with the York kings, was made a councillor by Edward IV., was given both dukedom and marshalship by Richard III., who found these lines which Shakespeare immortalizes pinned to his tent door on the morn of Bosworth's fight:

"Jocky, of Norfolk, be not so bold, and who died on the field with his betrayed king that same day. Eighteenth in succession from that "Jockey" is the present Duke of Norfolk, Henry Fitz-Alan Howard, the Premier Duke and hereditary Earl Marshall of England, and the foremost Catholic nobleman in Great Britain. Even in his religion he is historic, for another of his ancestors lost his head in Elizabeth's time for his devotion to Rome, and incidentally to that most bewitching of Rome's daughters, Mary, Queen of Scots. The Howards have kept the faith ever since, through good and evil report. The present Duke of Norfolk wedded Lady Flora Hastings, a daughter of the famous Countess of Loudon, and of another English family, which draws its very name from the battle-field that gave Britain to the Normans. Their single son, Philip Mary Joseph, Earl of Arundel and Surrey, was born blind. There had been something infinitely touching in the devoutness of the efforts made by the stricken parents to avert this affection. The poor little boy has been blessed in person by the Pope; he has been prayed for at Lourdes, at Knock, and at the other shrines in Europe, and special invocations on his behalf have been enjoined more than once from the Vatican upon the churches of Europe.—Cork Examiner.
For Dickson, thy master, is bought and sold,"

INVENTIONS OF HALF A CENTURY.—The number of inventions that has been made during the past fifty years is unprecedented in the history of the world. Inventions of benefit to the human race have been made in all ages since man was created; but looking back for half a hundred years, how many more are crowded into the past fifty than into any other fifty since recorded history! The perfection of the locomotive, and the now world-traversing steamships, the telegraph, the telephone, the audiphone, the sewing machine, the photograph, chromo-lithographic printing, the cylinder printing press, the elevator for hotels and other many storied buildings, the cotton gin and the spinning jenny, the reaper, the mower, the steam thresher, the steam fire engine, the improved process for making steel, the application of chloroform and ether to destroy sensibility in painful surgery cases, and so on through a long catalogue. Nor are we yet done in the field of invention and discovery. The application of coal gas and petroleum to heating and cooking operations is only trembling on the verge of successful experiment, the introduction of the stream from a great central reservoir to general use for heating and cooking is foreshadowed as among the coming events; the artificial production of butter has already created a consternation among dairymen; the navigation of the air by some device akin to our present balloon would also seem to be prefigured, and the propulsion of machinery by electricity is even now clearly indicated by the march of experiment. There are some problems we have hitherto deemed impossible of solution, but are the mysteries of even the most improbable of them more subtle to grasp than that of the ocean cable or that of the photograph or the telephone? We talk by cable with an ocean rolling between; we speak in our voices to friends a hundred miles or more from where we articulate before the microphone. Under the blazing sun of July we produce ice by chemical means, rivaling the most solid and crystalline production of nature. Our surgeons graft the skin from one person's arm to the face of another, and it adheres and becomes an integral portion of his body. We make a mile of white printing paper and send it on a spool that a perfecting printing press unwinds and prints, and delivers to you, folded and counted, many thousands per hour. Of a verity, this is the age of invention, nor has the world reached a stopping place yet.

An Ottawa telegram states that with the view of maintaining the active militia in a state of efficiency lieutenant-colonels who attain the age of 60 years, majors the age of 55, captains the age of 50, and lieutenants the age of 45 may be placed on the retired list. This regulation will apply also to regimental staff officers, according to their relative rank.

Much anger is expressed in the English journals against the great Spanish Republican statesman, Emilio Castelar, for his sympathetic reference to the killing of Carey. Senor Castelar concludes his article on the subject with the words—"A race with the determination of the Irish is invincible."

The largest sailing vessel afloat has arrived at Philadelphia. The Lord Wolseley, built in Belfast, is 308 feet in length, 42 feet 6 inches beam, and 25 feet depth of hold, drawing 21 feet of water and carrying 4,000 tons of cargo. She is ship-rigged, with four masts, the fore, the main and mizzen having yards, and when under full sail spreads 42,000 square feet of canvas.

Every sphere, according to the French proverb, has its heroes. This explains the reception given to the new hangman, Mr. Bartholomew Binns, successor to Marwood, when he arrived at his native village of Dewsbury. The doomsman of England made his entry amid a scene of the wildest enthusiasm, a number of local musicians preceding the procession, which marched to the strains of "See the Conquering Hero Comes."
