The Boundless Love of God.

Could oceans, rivers, springs, and lakes,
All that the name of water takes,
Beneath th' expanded skies,
Be turned to ink of blackest hue,
Add, too, the drops of morning dew,
To make the wonder rise;

A book as large could we suppose,
Which thinnest paper could compose,
As the whole earthly ball;
Were every shrub and every tree,
And every blade of grass we see,
A pen to write withal;

Were all who ever lived on earth,
Since nature first received her birth,
Most skilful scribes to place
In clearest light that wondrous love,
Found in the heart of God above,
Toward Adam's sinful race;

Were each Methuselah in age,
And every moment wrote a page,
They'd be beyond and die;
The pens would every one wear out,
The book be filled with ink, without
The ink be drain'd quite dry;
And then, to show that love, O God!
Angels above as well as men,
Archangels' e'en would fail;
Yea, till eternity should end,
A whole eternity they'd spend,
Nor then have told the tale!

The Eruption of Mount Vesuvius.

The late eruption of this burning mountain in Italy, is thus described by a correspondent to the London Daily News.

NAPLES, May 10th.
The lava has now advanced ten miles from its source, and is doing terrible damage. Just at the base of the cone a lake of fire has been formed, which looks like a red sea in an undulatory state. In the very centre of this has opened another crater, which is throwing out red-hot stones.

On the morning of the 7th, the crater, at the very summit, fired, as it were, two heavy cannonades; and, after sending forth lightning, flames and stones, broke up altogether. In the middle of the cone ten craters have been formed, and from those the lava pours forth like a river, and runs on the side of the Cavello as far as the Minatore. Here four other craters have been formed, which throw up bitumen in the manner of pyramids, and resembling gigantic exhibitions of fireworks. The whole of the summit of the crater is therefore like a sponge, and must inevitably fall in. The thin crust trembles under your feet. You may see the stones dance with the tremulous movement; and the immediately around the crater looks like the sides of a heated copper boiler.

There are reports of an opening towards Pompeii, which is not unlikely, and of another towards Resina. Last night I visited the scene of the most stirring interest, after an interval of two days. The whole length of this usually quiet road was like a fair, and such was the throng of carriages, which were moving on in three lines, that it was with difficulty we ever arrived at our destination. As we approached the menaced neighbourhood, the inhabitants were removing their goods, and on a bridge in the middle of the little township of Cerculo (through which in the winter time thousands waded from the summit of Vesuvius into of those mountain rivers so well known in Italy,) stood a company of sappers.

Creeping under this solid, handsome bridge into the bed of the river, we went up in the face of the lava, which was now coming rapidly down. Here again we sappers, raising mounds on either side, to divert the ruin from some private grounds, and keep the lava in one straight course. The smoke which rose over the heads of the multitudes told us we were close on the spot, and climbing up the bank and walking along the top, we looked down on this mighty mass of fire. How changed the neighborhood in two days! Where I walked on Sunday night was now a sea of fire. The side road by which I had come down into the main stream from Pollena and Massi di Somma was now full of blackened coke. The houses on the borders of the village had fallen in one, thirty poor people lived; a small chapel was swallowed up, a gentleman's villa, and a sad extent of vineyard and garden ground.

On the other side of the great lava bed another stream was branching off to San Sebastiano. We had hoped to have crossed it, and ascended to the cascade again, but it was no longer possible; for, as one says, speaking of a marshy country in the winter, the lava was cut. The fire here had begun to enter the burial ground of the little town, but was diverted from its course by a wall. On the opposite side of the stream were the king and all the royal family. The banks on either side were thronged with curious and anxious multitudes, whose faces were lighted up with the blaze of hundreds of torches, and with the more resplendent flame of the rapidly descending lava. Since the morning it had moved a mile. It was like a vast river of glowing coke.

As it moved on, the tens of thousands of lamps rolled and tumbled over the other, cracking, and grinding, and grating; and when, from the very face of it, a large lump fell off, the appearance was that of an iron furnace when the iron is being drawn. To make the resemblance more complete, at such times men darted forward with long poles taken from the neighboring vineyards, and pulled out great masses of lava, in which they embedded money for sale. What struck me at first, and still strikes me as the most majestic feature in the whole scene, is a slow, irresistible motion of that fiery flood. Active, almighty power without an effort. Sweeping everything before it, overcoming every obstacle, growing up against intervening walls or houses, and devouring them bodily, and then and then marching on in the same silent, unrelenting, irresistible manner as before.

There was a spot beneath my feet where a fall of masonry work had been built to break the violence of the winter floods; to this spot all eyes were directed. The fiery river would fall over it in an hour; as yet it was distant from it seventy yards, perhaps. Gradually it rose in height, and swelled out its vast proportions, and then vast masses fell off and rolled forward; then it swelled again, and on it rolled again and again, until it arrived at the very edge. There was a general buzz and murmur of voices. The royal family stood opposite to me, intermingled with the crowd, looking on with intense anxiety.

At last it broke, not hurriedly, still with a certain show of majesty. At first a few small lumps fell down; and then poured over a pure liquid of metal, like thick treacle, clinging sometimes mass to mass, from its glistening character, and last of all tumbled over gigantic lumps of scorine. Then on it moved once more in its silent, regular course, swelling up and spreading over the vineyards on either side; and now there was a rush for the road which traverses this lava-bed. Houses and the bridge bordered the road; the carriages had all been ordered off, and the bridge was being broken down—we were cut off completely. The sentinels would not let us pass, and struck us, and drove us back; but we forced our way, and then found too surely that it was impossible to get on.

The bridge was half demolished, and by the light of the torches we could see the soldiers above working away with the pick and the axe. We had therefore to retrace our steps, and making a long circuit through the open country, and open walls, came round to the top of the bridge—"run," said the sentinels, "or you will be too late." We crossed the narrow parapet which was still remaining, and soon afterwards down went the whole fabric. In this way it is hoped that the lava will be diverted from the townships of St. Sebastiano, Massi di Somma, and Pollena, which stand on either side, and have as yet only suffered partially. Cerculo, through which, however, the stream is rolling, will be sacrificed.

The expectation is that the lava, should the eruption continue, will flow down to the Ponte Maddaloni, and into the sea. So grand and so destructive an eruption has not been known for many years, and even now we cannot tell how or when it will terminate.

"Have You a House where You are going Pa?"

Many years ago you might have noticed in one of our large cities, a sorrow-stricken young man with a lady leaning upon his arm, making their way through the crowd and onward, entering a large handsome house on ——— street. They ascend silently to a chamber in the third story, in the northwest corner of the house. The room is spacious and airy, the furniture all rich and elegant, but the room is darkened to the somberness of twilight, for a sick man lies stretched upon the couch. He is panting for breath, yet he is fully conscious of all that is passing around him.

The young man who has just entered is his eldest son. In that same room are a group of younger children, from Anna, the child of seven upward to this eldest brother. The wife of the sick man, the mother of the children, is well nigh prostrate in her grief, for it has come upon her in an unexpected moment. Two weeks ago her husband was the strong, active man of business, full of his plans and prosperous in them all.

These two weeks, how quickly have they been numbered! The slight illness, the feeble palor struck frame, then the deep seated fever and the mastery of disease, these have brought the strong one to the gates of the grave, and he has summoned his family together that in as brief a manner as possible he may dispose of his property to them.

"Henry must have the house on ——— street, and one half the ownership of ——— block; Adnan and James the block of houses in ——— place; Maria the one on ——— street. Wife and Anna must remain here, and ———"

But the father can proceed no further. Choking emotion and his great weakness have overcome him, he falls back, draws his arms across his eyes and remains silent. Dear little Anna, has put her darling, she comprehends but slightly the meaning of her doings, but her heart is breaking for her father. He is going to die, to leave them, this she knows; but where is he going?

It is not a religious family; they have been kind, amiable and true to each other, but they have been living for this world. In the bosom of this child untrammelled thought pierces beyond the present, and in that deep, sad stillness, with the sick man just about to stop into the dark, unknown future, she makes the startling inquiry, "Have you a house, papa, where you are going?"

O, no! the poor man had not a house prepared for him. He had never asked the Saviour to "prepare a place" for him, and nobody else in the wide universe could give him a heavenly mansion. Are there not many, who make the same mistake. — Cong. Jour.

BOYS, LOOK AT THIS.—That "honesty is the best policy," was illustrated some years since, under the following circumstances:—

A lad was proceeding to an uncle's to petition him for his sick sister and her children, when he found a pocket wallet containing $50. The aid was refused, and the distressed family was pinched with want. The boy revealed his fortune to his mother, but expressed a doubt about using any portion of the money. His mother confirmed his good resolution, and the pocket-book was advertised and the owner found. Being a man of wealth, upon learning the history of the family he presented the $50 to the sick mother and took the boy in his service, and he is now one of the most successful merchants in Ohio. "Honesty always brings its reward—to the mind, if not to the pocket." But it always does, in the long run, to the pocket as well as to the mind.

THE GRACE OF GOD.—A writer in the Glasgow Record gives the following:

The conversion of Miss ——— is very strange, as it is related to me. She, being much honored and favored in gay circles, was waiting one evening for a pair of silk gloves for a soiree and ball to which she had been invited. When the shoes arrived, they were wrapped in a fragment of a missionary magazine; and as the time to go was not yet at hand, it came into her mind, for diversion's sake, to look into the curious paper, and see its silly meditations. And the gracious God was near, and so blessed that glance and reading, that from that hour she felt no rest till she knew by heart the kind Saviour of men, and by faith had won in him.

WORTH TRYING.—An exchange gives the following as a sure cure for a felon:—

A felon generally appears on the end of a finger or thumb; it is extremely painful for weeks and months, and in most instances cripples or disfigures the finger or thumb that falls a victim to it. But it can be easily cured if attended to in time. As soon as the pain is felt take the white skin of an egg, which is found inside of the shell, put it around the thumb or finger affected and keep it there until the pain subsides. As soon as the skin becomes dry it will be very painful, and likely to continue for half an hour or more, but be not alarmed. If it grows painful bear it; it will be of short duration, compared to what the disease would be.

MONUMENTS &c. THE business heretofore carried on by McKim & Clear, in the name and on account of the Subscriber, who has now on hand a most superior assortment of workmanship in his line, MONUMENTS, TOMB TABLES, MARBLE TABLES, &c. &c., combining beauty of design, correctness of finish, and durability of material. The Subscriber is determined to maintain his work as accurate throughout the Provinces. Determined to satisfy all who may kindly favor him with patronage, he will receive pay until the articles ordered are finished, and not then, unless they give complete satisfaction. He is prepared to rival all those firms, of Yankee extraction, which are endeavoring to build up their inferior fame upon the ruins of his Establishment, and who seem to think wretched workmanship may be palmed off with impunity upon this community, while the members of such firms give neither personal attention nor superintendence to the execution of their work. Having studied his business in England and Scotland, he has since his commencement of business in St. John, entirely cutripst all competitors whose importations from the United States have been even miserable samples of land of Yankee clap-net and wooden nutmegs! He desires to defend no man, but as a hard-working BRITISH MECHANIC, he thinks himself more deserving patronage than aliens and foreigners, particularly when the latter give their patrons more Monuments of Mistakes and botches, while he always has given, does now and will hereafter give MARBLE work of lasting and fitting Monuments for the graves of departed friends, twenty per cent better, more beautiful and more substantial than can elsewhere be obtained.
