Lines on the Death of Miss Evaline Graves of Upper Aylesford, N. S., who departed this life January 10th, 1855, aged 22 years. Awake my tuneful powers to sing

The wonders of that scene,-Though bright with glory when beheld, Appears almost a dream.

'Twas Evaline, that lovely youth-Young people lend an ear, Early in life she sought the truth, Which banished all her fear.

In youth she gave her pleasures up, And humbly bowed to God ; Found sweet salvation in that hope Which bore her through the flood.

Can I forget that lovely face, Where beauty seemed to smile-Where Jesus shed abroad his grace-Afflicted-humble child.

Deeply she drank the bitter cup Of anguish, grief and pain, While Jesus bore her spirit up, Nor did she dare complain.

I saw the ebbing tide of life-Her friends stood weeping round, While life and death maintained the strife-I heard a heaven'y sound.

" Glory to God," aloud she cried-"For what he's done for me-I soon shall drop this mortal flesh And shall my Saviour see."

Rapture increased with every breath, She bid her friends adieu, And smiled to meet the monster death, And home her spirit flew.

Upward I saw her spirit rise By faith's strong percing eye ; Seated among the Saints above No more to grieve nor die.

Oh parents hear her smiling say-Dry up your falling tears, I've run the race, and won the prize, And banished are my fears.

Brothers and sisters whom she loved, She seems to cal on you, To set your hearts on things above, And bid the world adieu

You must be born of God by grace, And live at Jesus' feet ; Or round the glorious throne above Surely we'll never meet.

Young people hear the solemn call, From God to you 'tis given ; And you may meet dear Evaline In the sweet world of Heaven.

But if you will reject his word Ana trample on his grace ; While Saints shall triumph in the Lord, You'll never see his face.

You'll sink in endless torments down Before an angry God, For ever to endure his frown-You've trampled on his blood.

Farewell to all-I drop my pen May this a blessing prove-And may we meet that child again, R. NORTO THE RELIGIOUS INTELLIC ENCER.

He had been brought up by Methodist parents, but had attended Presbyterian meetings, in his native country. I found him trying to sing one of the hymns his mother had taught him. When he, ceased, I introduced the great topic. "Ah." said he, "it is so strange ! I did not think of dying. It is curious. Why did not the doctors tell me sooner? Oh, I always meant to go to heaven. ### CRITICISING SERMONS.

The practice of criticising sermons is a bad one for many reasons, but the effect of such remarks within the hearing of children is often injurious to an extent but slightly appreciated by those who make them. A very young listener may have had his interest excited, and his heart affected by some affectionate appeal from the pulpit. During his walk from church with his parents, or at the dinnertable, if he should hear the discourse condemned, and perhaps the minister's marner ridiculed, how soon would vanish all the serious thoughts which had so recently been implanted in his mind ! Parents and others cannot be too careful about expressing their opinions of sermons in the presence of the unconverted, and particularly before young persons, for they know not what good seed they are thus unconsciously destroying.

A boy, placed at a school in the family of a teacher who is a clergyman, said recently. " Mamma, don't you think ministers like very much to find fault with each other ?" "Why, my son ; in what way ?" " I think they do, because every Sabbath when we are at table, Mr-finds fault logue : with the sermon, and tells how he thinks Drought to have explained the text. One day I heard a sermon from the words, 'I am the Vine, ye are the branches,' and liked it so much, but Mrlaughed at it !"

We have heard of two instances of serious impressions received during a discourse being entirely dissipated by the critical remarks afterwards made upon it. A correspondent of a contemporary relates the following :- " Not many months since, I was standing in a certain shop in a city, in which there were several ministers and other Christian brethren, conversing about a clergyman then just leaving the said city for another field of labor. Among other remarks, an expression was dropped about ministers not being respected ; when one of the company, a worthy layman, spoke up with considerable apparent warmth, 'Well, ministers need not expect to be respected much by the people, till they respect each other a little more." How so ?' said one. 'How so !' replied the deacon. " why, many ministers come into this place, and I often hear them talking about one another. and seldom near them speak well. They criticise their brethren severely."

A fact is stated in the life of the Rev. Dr. Alexander, which shows the ill effects of injudicious criticism upon the services of the sanctuary. He says that when a doy, living in a retired portion of the country, and without the stated means of grace, on one occasion a travelling clergyman delivered a sermon which left a deep impression on his mind. This, he tells us, however, was entirely obliterated when he reached home, by the disparaging remarks by his parents on the performance. And this, we fear, is frequently the result of similar incautious conduct. Too many look upon the sermon as a mere exhibition of elegant composition and rhetorical effort. They fail to recognise in it the preached Word, or to remember that the minister is not see her only child again, a boy of six years old ; using his own weapons, but the sword of the Spirit. and she was constantly talking of her darling. Christians too frequently evince the same diposition, Among the other things she told me this little this eity. and are dissatisfied unless the sermon comes fully anecdote of him.
