ORIGINAL VERSES

BY PHEBE ANN PEART. On the brevity of human life, the tender care of God, and the necessity of improving the short period of our probation. It is well we canuot read the future, We only may think of the past ; Our life is but short at the longest ; The rougher, the quicker the blast.

Our life, we are told, " is a vapor," Sometimes it is called " a span ;" And often compar'd to " a journey" The time that's allotted for man.

Then, since we are here on probation, How ought we the time to improve, And try, by fulfilling our dury, To lay up our treasures above ?

The God that takes care of the sparrows-How much more then will he of us? Though we meet with adversity's arrows, They only shall strengthen our trust.

Then, let us be thankful for mercies, They've follow'd our life all along ; And pray for more grace for the future, To keep us from doing what's wrong.

And, when our short voyage is ended. And days of probation are past, May we meet where the Saviour ascended, Az.d pleasures for ever shall last.

THE BIBLE.

Sword of the Spirit ! buckler, shield, and tower, Defence and refuge from th' usurper's power : In thee the poor may find a mine of wealth, The sick and languishing, a spring of health; The thristy, streams of grace ; the hungry' food ; Orphans, a father ; worshippers, a God. A two-edged blade to pierce and wound the soul, A baim to heal the heart and make it whole.

Volume divine ! to erring mortals given, To turn our feet to holiness and heaven. Thy sacred pages beam with holy light, Unvailing things eternal to the sight : Peace, consolation, joy, all flow through thee As gifts, unmerited, from Deity. A guide, unerring, to the realms of bliss, Where sorrows end, and all is happiness.

Standard of Truth ! in thee all sects may find The law of Christian charity defined : Beneath thy banner jarring sounds should cease ; Christians are taught to love, and live in peace ; To be united in the Saviour's cause, Proclaim His mercy, and obey His laws. Creeds and opinions must before thee fall, And thy authority be owned by all.

"There is but one Thing wanted to make us Comfortable."

So said a young wife to her husband one pleasant spring morning, ere he went to his daily toil. They had been married some months, and had just established themselves in one of the many pleasant villages with which New England abounds. Both were full of hope, the future opened before them rich in promise. A house had been taken in a quiet unpretending part of the town, and for some weeks they had been occupied in planning, and getting, and setting things to rights.

How busy was that young wife during all those bright spring days. She scarcely noticed the rapid and beautiful changes which the God of nature was making all around her, on the hill, in the forest, and all over the broad meadow that swept down to the river side but a little distance beyond their dwelling. The frosts had disappeared, the buds had swollen, nay, the green leaves had come how many of the young ladies when we meet out, and the flowers had burst forth, and the with are to perform the part of housekeepers, sweet warblings of birds floated by as the when the young men who now eye them so breeze swept past their open doors, but she admiringly have persuaded them to become
