REMINISCENCES OF BATTLE.

The Times correspondent has visited Alma, and thus describes the memories it recalled : gigantic graves, at the distance of 400 or 500 yards from the river on its north side, denotes the resting place of those who fell before the army crossed the stream, or who died after the fight in the ambulances. The road by by beams and uprights. The old post-house, and it was at the wall outside, which is yet torn by shot, that I met the two first wounded seen the first man killed—a drummer who was struck by locks of Mr. Hobbs, and became somewhat aca round shot, which bowled slowly along the head of the 50th, that he was moving right lock, a pad lock, &c. dates to along the line of fire of the enemy's guns, a chance;' then the river, stained here and quired. there with blood still flowing from the dead and dying, who lay on the shallows and the locks will be for public sale, as the invention daughter of the late Thomas Smith, architect, of Staff itself and the Commander-in-Chief, gathered on the rising ground close by; that gastly battle field, where so many lay in so small a space, putrescent with heat and wounds; the gray blocks of Russians melting away like clouds, and drifted off by the fierce breath of battle; the shriek and rush of the shells from the howitzers in the battery, the musketry, the frantic cheers of our men, as hard, rem.—Rev. Then one ecalled the spot where one half seen some riend lying dead, or some one-friend or foe alive-Watkin Wynn, stretched on the ground in front of the trench, with a smile on his face -Colonel Chester, with a scornful frown, and his sword clinched in the death grasp-Monck, with the anger of battle fixed on every feature -these and many another friendfin the peaceful camp of Aladyn or Devno rose up as they lived in the memory. The scowling Russians who glated so fiercely on their conquorers, and seemed to hate them even as they upplied their wants, then seen for the first me, left an impression respecting the type of the Muscovite character which has scarcely been effaced now that they have ceased to be messieurs nos amis b'ennemi." I recalled the two days past as no enemy ought to pass two days-on the field of battle, amid the dead-the horrid labours of those hours of despondency and grief where all should have en triumph and rejoicing, and the awakened vigour with which the army broke from is bivouac on the Alma and set out with no certain aim, no fixed project, on its chance march which fate has made so successful and so prosperous.
