JEHOVAH REIGNS. Though here the Christian trouble finds : His friends, too often, insincere : And fortune, to the worldling kind, To him adverse and cold appears : Let not his bosom sink with fear, Nor envy what the worldling gains ; A better home to him is near ; A richer prize-Jehovah reimu.

When foes appear on every side, And slander clouds the Christian's fame ; And slight and scorn his steps betide; And neighbors seek to blast his name ; Ah ! meekly let him bear the shame ; His God will wipe away the stains ; And though 'tis hard to bear the blame, Yet all is well-Jellovah reigns.

When pain the weary frame invades, And prostrate on the lonely bed The soul, bereft of human aids, Begins to feel that hope hath fied ; Perhaps a partner lov'd is dead, And nought on earth that's dear remains ; Ah ! Christian, lift thy drooping head ; Be comforted-Jehovah reigns.

And oh ! when life's last flickering gleam Portrays the close of mortal doom ; When backward seems an idle dream ; The future wrapp'd in deep'ning gloom ; Ah ! dying Christian then assume Faith's power, and bid the cong'ring strains Re-echo, from the vanquish'd tomb, A Saviour died-a Saviour reigns.

SPRING.

Spring is bursting from each bud, Spring is blooming in each flower, Dancing on the crystal flood, Blushing in the verdant bower. Every bright and joyous thing Heralds the return of spring.

But the heart whose bloom is past, Neer a second spring can know. Gold eternal winters cast O'er its waste unmelting snow, Nature's smiles can bloom impart, And make all verdant-save the heart !

Massacre and Plunder at Panama-

A correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune gives the following account of a dreadful riot and massacre at Panama.

One of the most trightful butcheries and afternoon of that day the passengers per birds each season." steamer Illinois arrived at the Railroad Depot "Hark !' said the lunatic, looking anxiously at Panama on their way to the steamer J. About sunset a difficulty occurred between one of the Illinois passengers and one of the negroes, which was freely joined by friends on both sides, and a general row now commenced. Pistols, bowie knives, swords, muskets, clubs and rocks were freely used, and with deadly effect. The Americans were generally unarmed, having only a few small revolvers, and, consequently, after a short struggle, had to yield the ground. The natives were reinforced by large numbers. They now made an attack upon the different hotels and drove all the inmates out, many of whom sought safety, as they supposed, in the depot build-About this time the Police (God save the term !) was called in requisition ; but instead of attempting to restore order, it is positively known that a portion of them joined the negroes and made the assault upon the depot. The police and negroes fired upon the crowd, and drove every man, woman and child from the building, who, in their fright, ran in to the thick brush and woods, where they remained during the night, and with the expectation of being murdered when davlight ap peared. A large number were fortunate enough to get on board the small steamer, and were conveyed to the J. L. Stephens. After the natives had accomplished their work. of death, and dispersed all from the ground, they commenced plundering the baggage, and destroying everything to be found in the hotels, the black mob attacked the Depot building, which contained a large amount of luggage and treasure, all of which the rascals obtained. They then commenced to tear up the railroad track, and to pull down the Telegraph poles, and destroyed both Railroad and Telegraph offices. They were aware that the Empress goods would be brought over from Aspinwall that night, and had laid their plans to seize them. They tore up the track in the vicinity of the depot, in order that the engine might run off ; but through the exertions of Mr. Williams (a conductor on the road,) the Express train was stopped by his signals before reaching the fatal point, and the lives of those on board and the goods were saved, and the train put back to Aspinwall, where it remained when the Philadelphia sailed. I have no means of knowing the number killed and wounded. There were twenty-five Americans found dead immediately around ing his life.
