A Report on Butter.

Joe's wife was Sally Siy-when a small girl she was sly-she would not half wash the milk pail, but sly it away, and let it sour. She was sly at school, and did not half get! her lesson, but would have her book in sight when reciting, but as she grew older, she learned that to get well married she must appear well, and so she bent al, her cunning to get a superficial education in everything, from roasting a notate to playing the piano. Poor Joe tell in love with her, and " love has no eves;" se he married her. But soon after he entered on house keeping, his eve-sight came, and he saw his fix, that it was for better or worse, and he thought it was all for came to her butter, for his mother was a real butter maker. Every time he saw or tasted Salty's butter, he felt the horrors. Her manner of making butter is somewhat as fol-
