Infant. Thou weepest, childless mother ; Ay, weep, 't will ease thine heart : He was thy first born son, Thy first, thine only one : 'Tis hard from him to part!

'Tis hard to lay thy darling Deep in the damp, cold earth, His empty crib to see His silent nursery. Once gladsome with his mirth.

To meet again in slumber His small mouth's rosy kiss ; They waken with a start, By thine own throbbing heart, His twining arms to miss

To feel (half conscious why) A dull, heart sinking weight, Tid memory on thy soul Flashes the psinful whole, That thou art desolate !

And then to lie and weep, And think the live long night (Feeding thine own distress With accurate greediness) Or every past delight.

Of all his winning ways, His pretty playful smiles, His joy at sight of thee, His tricks, his mimickry, And all his little wiles !

Oh ! these are recollections Round mothers' heart that cling ; That mingle with the tears And smiles of after years. With oft awakening.

But thou wilt then fond mother ! In after years look back, (Time brings such wondrous e. s ng,) With sadness not unpleasing, E'en on his gloomy track.

Thou 'it say : " My first-born blessing, It almost broke my heart, When thou wert forced to go; And yet for thee, I know Twas better to depart.

God took thee in His mercy, A lamb, untasked, untried ; He fought the fight for thee, He won the victory, And thou art sanctified

I look around and see The evil ways of men ; And O, beloved child ! I'm more than reconciled To have thy departure then.

The little arms that clasped me, The innocent lips that pressed, Could they have been as pure Till now, as when of yore ialled the on my breast ?'

CHARLESTOWN, Mass., Aug. 5, 1864. Gents :-Nothing but a daty and sympathy that I feel to communicate to others that are afflicted as I have been, would induce me to give this public acknowledgement of the bene-fit I have received from Prot. Wood's Hair Restorative When I first commenced using it, my hair was quite gray, and in spots entirely hald. I have now used the Restorative about five moaths, and my hair is entirely changed to its er-pinal color, brown, and the new hair is core three inches in length on the spots where it was bald. I have also been suich gratified at the healthy moistire and vigor of the haar, which before was dry, and it has ceased to come out as for merly. Respectfully yours, i.e., Mrs. K. A. STUDDALLD.

of age, and whose life has been made unhappy by the recollection of a great sin committed in his youth. It was a violation of the with love of the sea. eight commandment. When he was about twenty, William Gage went to a neighbouring village to attend a celebration, which brought together a great multhoughtless young men of his own age, who told him they meant to have a " high time," and asked him to join them. Their plan was to see how much they could make that day by piferring from persons who had articles this plan.

As they entered the village they found a large collection of people, and many tents were erected for the sale of various articles. Their plan was easily carried out, and they soon erected a tent for themselves, in which they sold the articles they had stolen.

William went into the tent of a man who was selling oranges, and representing himself as a merchant's clerk, offered him his services. The man thanked him, said he had more business than he could attend to, and would be glad to have him essist him. One of William's companions stood near the door, and as he sold one orange, he handed another to him. In this way he deprived the man of half his profits, and he was not detected.

At night the young men reckoned up the money they had made, and it amounted to sixty dollars.

William returned home, and went to his room, but his conscience would not allow him to rest. He thought of the man he had wronged-he thought of his family ; perhaps they were poor, and would suffer for the want of what he had so unjustly taken. He thought of those words uttered or Mount Sinal, and the thunderings and lightenings, by the voice of God himself, " Thou shalt not steal." He thought of the table of stone, on which was written by the finger of God, " thou shalt not steal."

He resolved to find the man he had defrauded, to make confession to him, and restore his property. He arose in the middle of the night, and returned to the village, but the man had goue before he had arrived. He was told he would find him in the next village. He followed him there, but was disappointed in the same way. He did not know the man's name or place of residence, and was unable to find him.

" The events of that day," said the old gentleman, " I shall never forget. It was fifty years ago last summer that these scenes occurred, and I have always been seeking for the man whom I wronged, and wishing to restore him four-fold. I am now more than seventy years of age, and the recollection of that sin is still fresh in my mind, and I am still ready to restore four-fold."

May you be saved from similar unhappiness by remembering to keep the command. ments of God. Crime once committed can not be recalled, and it can be forgiven only for the sake of Jesus Christ .- American Messenger.
