

Religious

BIBLE SOCIETY, MISSIONARY, AND SABBATH SCHOOL ADVOCATE

E. McLEOD, Editor.

VOL. IV—NO. 51.

ST. JOHN, NEW BRUNSWICK.

That God in all things may be glorified

Christianity in India—Important Meeting at Edinburgh.

A public meeting was recently held at Edinburgh, Scotland, for the purpose of forming in connection with the present crisis in India, an association for the removal of all Government encouragement of caste, connection with military, and opposition to the profession and promulgation of Christianity in the East.—The meeting was numerously attended. We quote some of the addresses on the occasion.—

The Rev. Dr. Alexander in the course of his remarks said: "The object of the present meeting I understand to be twofold. In the first place, to inaugurate or initiate a protest from the people of this country against the patronage and encouragement, direct or indirect, of idolatry by British officials in the East; and, secondly, to initiate a demand from the Christian people of this country that, in all time coming no discouragement or impediment shall be, directly or indirectly, put by our Government there in the way of the progress of Christianity among the people.—With regard to Government encouragement, patronage, and support of idolatry, this glaring fact we have before us, that from the very first the Indian Government had acted on the principle of patronizing and supporting the abominable delusions of the people of that country; and if of late years they have consented to a very qualifying extent from their former position, it has only been under the force of the constant pressure from the Christian people and Christian feeling in this country.—(Applause.) I believe it is a fact,—and a singular fact it is,—that before the British Government took possession of Juggernaut, they, through their officials, stopped up all the entrances of the temples there were no want of attendance. He was rejoiced to say, that India had had Governors at different times who had taken a more just view of this question. Lord Wellesley was not content with the use of the New Testament, but directed the missionaries to translate the Psalms of David and the Book of Isaiah as a class-book in some of the colleges, while in 1847, when the discussion was going on in Madras regarding the proposed scheme of education, the Marquis of Tweeddale, then Governor, proposed that there should be an hour every day set apart for instruction in the Bible in the Government schools, and that attendance at the class should be voluntary. This was the system which prevailed in Ceylon, which was under the Queen's own government, and where the population and the religions followed were almost identical with those on the Continent. In Bengal, some few months ago, it was arranged between the Church Missionary Society and Lord Canning that the former should take charge of the schools for the education of the Santals, a very wild and uncivilized tribe; but the Court of Directors refused to sanction the arrangement, or deviate from their ancient system, although there were really circumstances in the case of the Santals which would have justified such an exception. Mr. Anderson proceeded to contend that it would be for the interest of the Government to circulate the Bible, for its teachings must tend to obedience and loyalty; and to quote an opinion expressed shortly before the outbreak by a German missionary in India, that the British Government, in bringing up the fine youth with the literature of Greece and Rome, while denying them the Bible, was nourishing hypocrites in its bosom, whose minds, heated by the lessons of ancient history, led them to detest their foreign rulers and to indulge in the delusion that in one night the people could rise up and destroy all the English throughout the country.

The Rev. J. Murray Mitchell then addressed the meeting. The fact of my being a missionary, and totally unconnected with the Government, only makes me the more anxious that the exact truth should be known. Fair play to everybody, and Indians, natives not excepted. (Applause.) When we speak of Government connection with idolatry and other evils, it is ever distinguish between past and present. A calm review of the whole history of that connection would be in many ways instructive. About the beginning of the present century matters were as bad as could be; and we cannot easily argue so strong regarding the sin and shame of the state of things that then existed. But since the year 1813, and still more since 1822, when the admiral despatch of Lord Bentinck was passed, improvement has been going on. Everyone knows that Sati, Thuggee, and infanticide have been suppressed. Slavery, too, has vanished from our territories, though it still exists in a fearful form in Travancore, a native State. The payment of pigrimage taxes into the Government treasury—the administration of oaths in the name of false gods—the fixing of salaries in honour of native festivals—practices for men to false gods—the official attendance of Government functionaries at their festivals—the diabolical management by Government of temple funds—these, and similar evils, have ceased. Nor is there any more of Government opposition to missionary efforts. Our missions receive perfect toleration, and have ruled no other home. Let us hence, in fairness to the Indian Government, note that the admiral's ratification of the stand of Ceylon, in the dominion of the King of Denmark, and set up a station at Serampore. When Mr. Parkinson wanted to go to India, he was not allowed to proceed from England, and had actually to go to Copenhagen and procure a passage out by the Danish dominions. Another missionary of the London Missionary Society had reached his destination near Fort St. George, but the moment he then Governor heard of his arrival he sent orders to the governor of the fort to arrest him, and send him back by the first opportunity. He was arrested, and died a martyr to this infamous policy; for he was cast into prison, where he was seized with fever and died. Thank God, he by that deathless possession of the book, for the sufferer created a great noise, and led to a complete alteration of the charter of the East India Company, putting an end to that state of things. I take it that this is pretty much what we want—that Government would let idolatry and its followers alone, and give free scope, without fear, discouragement, or interruption, to those faithful men who wear the banner of the Cross, and seek to preach Christ and Him crucified. (Loud applause).

Mr. Finlay Anderson, spoke of the treatment the Bible received in the Government schools. The despatch authorized its being placed in the school library, but prohibited the master from giving any explanation of it unless voluntarily asked for by the pupil, and out of school hours. This limitation was, in fact, tantamount to prohibition altogether, inasmuch as it was not likely the pupil should inquire about a book of which he heard nothing; and if he did, then was a missionary in the towns where the Government schools were established who was not only ready to explain the Bible to any inquirer, but to present him with a copy of it. There was no fear that by making the Bible a class-book the schools would come to be attended in the missionary schools of Madras there was no want of attendance. He was rejoiced to say, that India had had Governors at different times who had taken a more just view of this question. Lord Wellesley was not content with the use of the New Testament, but directed the missionaries to translate the Psalms of David and the Book of Isaiah as a class-book in some of the colleges, while in 1847, when the discussion was going on in Madras regarding the proposed scheme of education, the Marquis of Tweeddale, then Governor, proposed that there should be an hour every day set apart for instruction in the Bible in the Government schools, and that attendance at the class should be voluntary. This was the system which prevailed in Ceylon, which was under the Queen's own government, and where the population and the religions followed were almost identical with those on the Continent. In Bengal, some few months ago, it was arranged between the Church Missionary Society and Lord Canning that the former should take charge of the schools for the education of the Santals, a very wild and uncivilized tribe; but the Court of Directors refused to sanction the arrangement, or deviate from their ancient system, although there were really circumstances in the case of the Santals which would have justified such an exception. Mr. Anderson proceeded to contend that it would be for the interest of the Government to circulate the Bible, for its teachings must tend to obedience and loyalty; and to quote an opinion expressed shortly before the outbreak by a German missionary in India, that the British Government, in bringing up the fine youth with the literature of Greece and Rome, while denying them the Bible, was nourishing hypocrites in its bosom, whose minds, heated by the lessons of ancient history, led them to detest their foreign rulers and to indulge in the delusion that in one night the people could rise up and destroy all the English throughout the country.

The Rev. J. Murray Mitchell then addressed the meeting. The fact of my being a missionary, and totally unconnected with the Government, only makes me the more anxious that the exact truth should be known. Fair play to everybody, and Indians, natives not excepted. (Applause.) When we speak of Government connection with idolatry and other evils, it is ever distinguish between past and present. A calm review of the whole history of that connection would be in many ways instructive. About the beginning of the present century matters were as bad as could be; and we cannot easily argue so strong regarding the sin and shame of the state of things that then existed. But since the year 1813, and still more since 1822, when the admiral despatch of Lord Bentinck was passed, improvement has been going on. Everyone knows that Sati, Thuggee, and infanticide have been suppressed. Slavery, too, has vanished from our territories, though it still exists in a fearful form in Travancore, a native State. The payment of pigrimage taxes into the Government treasury—the administration of oaths in the name of false gods—the fixing of salaries in honour of native festivals—practices for men to false gods—the official attendance of Government functionaries at their festivals—the diabolical management by Government of temple funds—these, and similar evils, have ceased. Nor is there any more of Government opposition to missionary efforts. Our missions receive perfect toleration, and have ruled no other home. Let us hence, in fairness to the Indian Government, note that the admiral's ratification of the stand of Ceylon, in the dominion of the King of Denmark, and set up a station at Serampore. When Mr. Parkinson wanted to go to India, he was Intelligencer.

TERMS.—ONE DOLLAR A YEAR, IN ADVANCE

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 18, 1857.

Brief Account of the Death of a Karen Child.

BY HIS FATHER.

[Translated from the Karen, by Mrs. Vinton.]

My son Reuben was eight years old when he died. He was taken ill of fever and dysentery the 13th of January, 1856, and after suffering fifteen days, he died Sabbath morning the 28th. For days he was so ill that he could not speak, and could only reply to questions by a nod of the head. But whenever he commenced praying, he immediately seemed so excited as to apparently forget his sufferings altogether, and would pray a long time in an audible voice. As his sufferings increased in intensity, and symptoms of death appeared, his strength seemed to fail, so that he could converse freely and so loud that we could all hear readily. Once he called out, "O dear father, dear mother, I am dying." I replied, "My son, your father and mother can do nothing for you.—Look up to God for aid; he alone can help you. Do not lose sight of him for a moment, if God wishes you to live, you will live, but if he calls you to himself, you must submit peacefully." Another standing by inquired if he was going to leave us? "Do you not pity your parents and your little sister?" "Yes," said he "I do pity them; but if God calls me, I shall go." His mother replied, "If God calls you away, your mother will be lonely and unhappy. Do you really think God is calling you?" "Yes," he replied, "I see Him." I asked him if he saw the Saviour also. He said, "Yes; I see him with God, and a great multitude of people too." His mother asked him if he saw his elder brother and sister who died last year? He said, "Yes." When he said this, he looked up to his mother and said, "O, dear mother, give me some cool water that I may drink freely and go to rest." We gave him the water, and I said to him as I laid him down to rest, "My son, when you arrive in the kingdom of heaven, ask a blessing on your father, and mother, and little sister." He assented.

A little after, he said, "It seems a long and difficult way to God. If he does not come and call us, we shall never see him where he is." He soon asked for his little sister. We told him she had gone out to play. As he was too weak to beckon with his hand, we called his sister to him, and she put her face to his, and he kissed her twice and she sat along down to his feet, still keeping his eyes upon her and calling, "dear, little sister, dear little sister." I said to him, "My son, you are tired; rest a little." He rested a few moments, and then exclaimed, "Oh, that I might not die now!" I said, "My son, do not let your mind waver in the least; think not of things on earth. If the Lord will that you live, submit to his will; if he calls you to himself, feel resigned also." Soon after this he commenced praying, and then singing of the grace of God, in his own strains, made up as he went along, his mother and I following him as well as we could. He then commenced singing the 232d No. of the Karen Hymn Book.

He then exclaimed, as if seeing something that we cou'd not see, "John (I said,) John was one of the apostles, who was sent to do the work of God." His chin quivered so violently that he spoke with the greatest difficulty, but he made a great effort and cried, "Take his likeness! take his likeness!" I replied, "Whose likeness?" He replied, "my brother Jesus" (who died last year.) I replied, "Your father can not see him, and can not take his likeness. You talk so much you will get tired; think only of God, and pray in your heart to him, and when you are in his presence remember your father." He assented.

After calling again for water to moisten his parched mouth he commenced praying again, but his chin trembled so that we could scarcely understand him, but he continued the effort and we could no more than catch a sentence, among which were, "O Lord, Heaven is thy Throne, Earth is thy footstool; Thou art omniscient; thy Son the Lord Jesus Christ has shed his blood for us; the Holy Spirit has regenerated us and made us bold; O Lord we beseech thee in the name of thy Son, save us. Amen." He prayed three times, and sang of the grace and goodness of the Lord three times. The last time it grew fainter and fainter until we could hear no sound, only his lips moved, and his spirit fled with his song up to his Maker, his Saviour and his God.

Many who sat by side and witnessed his triumphant death, felt greatly strengthened in the Lord, and exclaimed, "When I die, let me die like this child, let my heart be as firm as his."

What is somewhat remarkable is, that two individuals living in different places, come to me, and each one told me his dream, and they were quite just alike. They said that they dreamed that they saw two beautiful beings dressed in white, bearing a kind of beautiful cot or cradle to take away my son. They dreamed also that they asked my son, if he was going to leave his father and mother, adding, if he did, they would be exceedingly sorrowful. But he replied, "they have come for me and I must go. Do not let them grieve for me after I am gone."

Another person dreamed that when my son was dying, my whole house was full of brilliant light. We therefore think that though our child is carried away from us on earth, yet we his parents ought not to sorrow as those who have no hope—that all the circumstances of his death, and even these dreams of our friends, should tend to console us under our loss, and show us that our son still lives with our heavenly Father.

When I think of this, I am comfortable, yea, happy in God. And I also say that when I leave this body, may I be as fervent in prayer and as strong in the Lord as was my dear son, who has gone before me. The Bible declares our life to be a vapor. May we live to God while we live, and

What Jesus comes for us
We'll joy to die,
And leaning on his breast
Ascend the sky.

LOSING A PRAYER BOOK.

In the year 1844, the Rev. Mr. — entered upon his duties in the large and promising field of —. He was a man well qualified for the work of the ministry. With a clear head, a sound judgment, and a warm heart, and above all, aught of the Holy Spirit, nothing was wanting, humanly speaking, so far as he was concerned, to make him eminently useful. There was a power and energy in his ministrations not to be measured. For a time all went on well. His preaching was effective. There was quite a shaking among the dry bones in the church. The Sunday school flourished as never before. There was a manifest interest among teachers and scholars. There was a zeal and life among the members of the church, and very encouraging to the pastor's heart, and very powerful in its influence for good upon those that were without. The preacher's labours were highly acceptable, both in and out of the pulpit, and many inroads were made upon Satan's kingdom.

But after a few years things began to change.

The Sunday school ceased to flourish as formerly.

Both teachers and scholars were becoming irregular.

The weekly gatherings for social prayer were thinly attended.

And although there was no very great falling off in the congregation on the Sabbath, it was evident that there was a great lukewarmness reigning throughout the church, and a very decided indifference among unbelievers.

The preaching of the Gospel was no longer effective.

Souls were no longer converted under it.

The power, and zeal, andunction of the minister were all gone.

At times there was even an awkwardness in his manner.

It had become quite a common remark of the congregation, "I wonder what is the matter with our pastor. What makes him so uninteresting? I wish he would take more interest in his work, and try to preach better sermons."

Under this state of things a few of the old fathers in Israel determined that they would spend an evening with their minister; and in a frank yet kind manner, tell him of the feeling in the congregation.

They did so. "Ho listened with a sad heart to all they had to say, and thanked them for their openness and candour.

He then told them that much which they had said was news to him; that he had witnessed with no little pain a sad decline of interest about heavenly things;

that it had given him beyond measure to see that during the past year not one soul had been converted in his congregation. And as to the dissatisfaction in regard to his sermons, he was not surprised to hear it.

He was deeply conscious himself that they were far inferior to what they once were; that his own conscience testified that they were far inferior to what they once were; that his own conscience testified that they were far inferior to what they once were; that his own conscience testified that he studied and laboured in and out of the pulpit with a cold and heavy heart, and that it was owing to him if he would never be able to shake off his lethargy.

"But," continued the minister, "there is no mystery in all this. It is easily explained;

I have lost my Prayer Book."

As both pastor and people were opposed to liturgies and never used them, the old fathers heard this with no little amazement.

"I will explain," says the pastor; when I came among you, and during the period when the preaching of the Gospel was so effective in our midst,

the members of the church were all engaged with one mind and heart in prayer for a blessing upon the word read and spoken.

It was then easy and most delightful to study and to to preach, when my heart and hands were born up by the sympathy and prayers of God's people.

I was always happy, and the word was very effective, because, in answer to prayer, the Holy Ghost sent it home like an arrow to the hearts of the hearers. Now things have changed. That warm sympathy has cooled down. Your pastor and his work are no longer kept before a throne of grace in the daily and earnest supplications of his people.

I have lost my Prayer-book!"

MODEST APPAREL.

A lady once asked a minister whether a person might not be fond of dress and ornaments, without being proud.

"Madam," replied the minister, "when you see the fox's tail peeping out of the hole, you may be surprised to know that it is within."

"Please I leave with you, my pen; I give unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid."

"Thank you, Sir."

and behaviour. "Madam," said he, "so dress and so conduct yourself that persons who have been in your company, shall not recollect what you had on." This will generally be the case when singularity of dress is avoided, and where gentleness of mind and gentleness of manners are cultivated.

A minister calling to visit a lady, was detained a long time while she was dressing. At length she made her appearance, bedecked in all the frippery of fashion and jolly. The minister was in tears. She asked the cause of his grief; when he replied, "I weep, madam, to think that an immortal being should spend so much of that precious time, which was given her to prepare for eternity, in vainly adoring that body which must so soon become a prey to worms." Half an hour is surely sufficient for dressing. Reader, if you spend hours in furnishing