No wonder in his hour of trouble, than he turned away from her, and buried his face in his hands. No wonder he felt angrily toward her, the author of this evil.

For a while Mrs. Huston knew not what to do. The hot tears ran fast down her cheeks, but she dared not approach her husband—“He will drive me away,” she said to herself. “But I have deserved it all, I have deserved it all.”

At last she ventured to approach him, and at last he was induced to listen. With many tears she promised never to be negligent again; “it had been a lesson to her,” she said, “which she would never forget.”

Now she forgave it. Years have passed, and the Hustons are now comparatively well off; for, after a while, Mr. Huston obtained another situation, and finally became a partner in the house.

But to this day, when the wife sees either of her daughters negligent, she calls the offender to her, and tells, as a warning, the story of the two rocks.

The way to Fortune; or, better to Work than to Beg.

Let no poor man after reading the following interesting fact, ever despair of making a respectable living:

A gentleman was once walking down one of the streets of P., when a beggar loudly cried a few coppers for a night’s lodgings. The gentleman looked earnestly at the poor man, and enquired,

“Why do you not work? You should be ashamed of begging.”

“O, sir, I do not know where to get employment.”

“Nonsense,” replied the gentleman, you can get work if you will. Now, listen to me. I was once a beggar like you. A gentleman gave me a half crown piece, and said to me, “Work, and don’t beg.” God helps those who help themselves.” I immediately left P., and got out from my old companions. He remembered the advice given me by my mother before she died, and I began to pray to God to keep me from sin, and to give me his help day by day. I went round to the houses in the country places, and with part of my few shillings bought old things. The e. is stuck to the paper mill and soil them at a profit. I was always willing to give a fair price for the things that I bought, and did not try to sell them for more than I had paid them worth. I determined to be honest, and God prospered me. My purchases and profits became larger and larger, and now I have got more than ten thousand crowns worth that I can call my own. One great thing has contributed to my success in this, I have kept from drink and indecent.”

And then he knelt, and bowed to the floor. No turned his little head, Till all his prayer was finished.

The last—last word was said;

No mockery was his part;

That instant from him in prayer,

Light shone on other feet.

Light shone with us sinners.

LOVELY SIGHT.

Slept down beside a chair.
Then place his head upon his hands,
And sweetly lip a rose.
A slender sight was not to behold;
No mockery was his part;
That instant from him in prayer,
Light shone on other feet.

THE TOEN POCKET.

“My dear,” said Mr. Huston to his young wife, as he rose from his breakfast table, “will you mind my over-coat pocket. The day is pleasant, so that I can leave the coat without inconvenience.”

“Very well, my love,” was the reply, and a moment after the front door closed on the husband, who departed to the store, where he filled the place of a responsible citizen.

Mrs. Huston rose to attend to her domestic affairs, and occupied in them soon forgot the torn coat pocket. About noon, she had finished her work, and having a spare hour before dinner, she sat down and took up a novel. In this way she continued to overlook the torn pocket, until the meal was over, and her husband had again left the house, when going to look for the overcoat, she found that Mr. Huston had put it on, the weather having grown cooler.

“Oh! well, it will do to-night,” said the wife. “I suppose he will need it when he finds I forget it, but it can’t be helped now.”

The truth was, Mrs. Huston was what is called “a good easy woman,” that is, she never intentionally injured any one, but was only thoughtless and forgetful; her sins were those of omission. So she found no difficulty in dismissing all uncomfortable thoughts concerning the torn pocket; and resuming her novel, was soon deep in the mazes of the heroine.

About dusk there came a violent ring at the bell. It was a magnetic ring, as it were, and expressed anger, or great tribulation. If not both, it made the somewhat nervous Mrs. Huston start with a little shriek. She stopped reading, and listened.

Presently the servant opened the door, and the step of her husband was heard, but heavier and quicker than usual. Her heart unconsolingly began to beat faster. “Oh, dear,” she cried to herself, “what can be the matter?”

She was losing light in doubt. Her husband at once came into the sitting-room, emotions of rage and suffering alternating perpetually in his face. Frightened at someone so anxious, the wife looked up, her lips parted in terror, and unable even to welcome him as usual.

“See what you have done,” cried Mr. Huston passionately, taking of his over-coat, turning the pocket inside out, and showing the garment into his son’s lap. “What can be the matter?”

“What, what have I done?” gasped his wife at last, as he sternly regarded her. “Has anything happened?”

“Anything happened? Didn’t I tell you I was ruined? I have lost five hundred dollars, and been discharged because I lost it, all because you didn’t mend my pocket. Not it the first time, as you know, that you have neglected us in what you ought. You are always forgetting. I often told you you would ruin us in some way.”

“But, what have I done?” gasped his wife at last, as he sternly regarded her. “Has anything happened?”

“But, what have I done?” gasped his wife at last, as he sternly regarded her. “Has anything happened?”

“How did it happen? In the most natural way possible. I had a note to pay for the firm, and as the bank lay in this part of the town, I brought the money up to dinner, and, on going out, put it into my over-coat pocket, supposing you had mended the rent. When I reached the bank, the money was gone. It was then nearly three o’clock. Almost frantic I came back, to wait a few steps of the bank, hoping to find the money on the pavement, it was needless, as I might have known; but I looked again and again, asking everybody I met. At last I went back to the store. But the news had preceded me. The master had already been there to protest the note, and my employers would not hear a word of excuse—I was discharged on the spot.”

As he ceased speaking, he drew himself on a chair in the aisle, and buried his face in his hands. His disfigure was indeed a terrible blot. His discharge was indeed a loss of place, and the consequent refusal of his employers to recommend him, a future full of disasters. And all for what? All because his wife could not remember the simplest duty.

strong military aid is given by the United States Government.

At this time, sir, there are five young men living out a weary life of misery and wretchedness, growing beneath heavy loads of iron, in the damp and dismal cells of the Unit Penitentiary, for no crime known to the laws other than expressing opinions of disprobation of the doctrines of Mormonism, which here is the blackest crime a man can commit. It is worthy of remark that these young men are not Mormons, but were passing on their way to California from Missouri. Four fellows! they are doomed to a sickly and torturing death, and that soon, for it is not possible to survive such brutal treatment very long.—Cir. Com.

ATTEMPTED ASSASSINATION OF A YOUNG GIRL FOR ADVERTISING THE PRESBYTERIAN FAITH. In Philadelphia, on Sunday afternoon, an attempt was made to abduct a young girl named Alice Weilin, who has renounced the Catholic and adopted the Protestant religion. She was to have been baptized at the Spruce Street Baptist Church on the Sunday previous, but as the ceremony was about to be performed, her brothers interceded, and a serious difficulty was the result. On Sunday afternoon Miss Weston, who is at service in the family of Mr. Webb, was called on by her sister, who invited her to take a walk. The invitation was accepted, and upon reaching the corner of Second and Washington street Miss Weston, who is at service in the family of Mr. Webb, was seized by her three brothers, who, with the assistance of three other men, attempted to force her away. Her cries and resistance, however, attracted a crowd, and soon the police were upon the ground, and her brothers and their accomplices were arrested. On Monday the parties had a hearing before Mr. Almon and the assembling parties were held to answer to the charge, and Miss Weston allowed to depart. Miss W. is sixteen years of age. A great deal of interest was manifested in her case.
