The Stream of Time.

doetry.

BY J. W. BAKKER, I saw a playful, laughing child Upon a placid stream, And in his light and fragile bark, He wandered mid a dream. The skies were smilling overhead, The skies were smilling overhead, The balmy air a fragrance shed, For summer, with his genial hand, Had beantified the smiling land With flowers-and by the quiet stream In modest lovelinees, unseen, Full many a cluster, rich and rare, Gave fragtanee to the balany air.

But, ah ! that curtain, dark as night, Shuts the great future from the sight. Thro' whose deep fold a feeble rar, May dart across the uncertain way,-A glimmer from the spirit-land To guide our ever-wandering eyes

Amid the darkness, and to point Us where the path of danger lies,

Still gliding downward, dreaming still, The smiling boy his course pursued, Between the fragrant, flowery banks, With gems of loveliness bedewed. But far adown the erystal stream, On which the rays of sunlight gleam, Dash furious billows, --dreary shores O'er which the threat his the threat his the stream. O'er which the threat'ning tempest lowers

The youthful drammer heeds it not, Till whirling in the waters wild, And sees, alas ! his specious dream,— His heart of happiness beguiled. Not cries, nor tears can e'er avail, No hand is mighty to prevail Against the fearful destiny ; Aione mid angry rapids he. One moment, whirls—then all is o'er, The fragile bark is seen no more. The fragile bark is seen no more.

Thus, dreaming on time's glittering stream, Man dashes downward, till the night Is gathering round him, drear and dark; The waves of dcath inguifhis bark And shots the mortal from his sight.

In scenes of sorrow or of mirth, In festive night or joyous day; Where'er we wander o'er the earth, Time's stream is bearing us away. Time's stream is bearing us away. Falls. -Morning Star. liagora Falls.

The Bible the best relief in Distress.

In 1814, a young man sailed from London for Canada. On the banks of Nefoundland, the vessel sprang a-leak. The winds being ahead, they bore up, that they might ply the pumps the better. The vessel being small, they could relieve but one at a time, In this auxious state they continued six days and nights, during which time they threw over a rt of their cargo; notwithstanding all their efforts, however, the water increased in turn to be relieved, he, with the passengers, retired below for the purpose of uniting in prayer, and reading the Bible, their usual evening employment. Before the time arrived, when he was to take his turn again at the pump, they consoled each other mingling beir tears, in despair of being able to preserve the vessel through the night. Standing around the table on which the Bible lay, he opened il, and the passage that first met his eye was Acts xxvii. 22. ' Now I exhort you to be of good cheer, for there shall be no loss of any man's life among you, but of the ship."
