The Terrible Moment:

Zoetry.

" My Spirit shall not always strive with man." Gen. vi, 3.

There is a TIME, we know not when, A POINT we know not where Which makes, the destiny of man To glory or despair.

There is a line by us unseen. That crosses every path ; The hidden boundary between God's patience and his wrath.

To pass that limit is to die, To die is if by stealth; It does not quench the burning eye, Or pale the glow of health.

The conscience may be still at ease, The spirits light and gry ; That which is pleasing still may please And care be thrurst away:

But on that forehead God has set Indelibly a mark, Unseen by man, for man as yet Is blind and in the dark.

And yet the doomed mans path below May bloom as Eden bloomed ; He did not, does not, will not know Or feel that he is doomed.

He knows, he feels that all is well. And every fear is calmed ; He lives, he dies, he wakes in hell, Not only doomed but damned,

Oh, where is that mysterious bourn By which our path is crossed. Beyond which God himself hath sworn That he who goes is lost?

How far may we go on in sin? How long will God forbear? Where does hope end and where begin The contines of despair ?

An answer from the sky is sent, " Ye who from God depart,

Curious Retribution.

A CORRESPONDENT sends us the following very singular and remarkable incident, which illustrates the power of conscience to punish those who have escaped from human law :

A few years ago some young people were looking for chestnuts in a piece of woods in R., when suddenly they came upon the body of a man so decomposed as to be beyond indentification. It lay at the foot of two small trees, and there was a rope around the and this made him so happy. neck. On close inspection there were marks found on the sides of the tree at the points where the limbs push out as if a person with heavy boots had climbed up for some purpose. For a little time the impresread a chapter to her, while her brother gave sion was that the man had committed suicide by climbing in the tree and hanging himself. As the case was more narrowly looked into, Il crope about his neck was found unbroken. and it was apparently strong enough to hold such a body, if it had ever been attached to it. It was eviden that death was not caused | true :--in that way, and the footmarks on the bark of the tree seemed to indicate that some one had killed the man, and had taken this means of leading others to believe that he had hung himself. This suspicion was strengthened by finding concealed under a stone in the vicinity, an old pocket-book, and some articles of clothing. Papers in the pocket-book indicated that its owner was a German, which fact with another is that the two upper front teeth was missing in the dead man's the ingratitude of children passed into a pro- warrant against the inferior excitement of jaw, brought to the mind of a shop-keeper verb?
