Christ, the safe refuge of the soul, When tossed on life tempestuous sea; When wave on wave of troubles roll, Our faith would cling to thee.

Though wildly rage the fiercest storm, While the poor heart is tossed and riven; Yet on the waves sits mercy's form, And points our hope to heaven.

Where all is peace and joy and love, No sorrow there can fill the breast, For Jesus sits enthroned above, To give the weary rest.

Rest from temptation, grief, and pain, Freed from our toils and cares below; Redeeming love shall be our theme, When Jesus leads us through.

THE COPY-BOOK.

"Please, father give it back to me! I wish you would not look Inside; why can you want to see My poor old copy-book!

"You'll find a blot on every page, I've not the smallest doubt, I know 'tis shameful at my age; I tried to rub them out.

"There's something wrong in every line, I'm sure I could not tell If 't was another hand than mine,

"Do shut the book and end my grief; I'd burn it if I durst.

What those strange letters spell.

I truely think that closing leaf Worse written than the first."

FATHER. "Boy, there's another copy-book,

Your father God has seen, You cannot close it from his look; Is that writ fair and elean? "If there are blots and crooked lines Across those pages white, When his clear eye upon them shines, 'T will be a hateful sight, "And you are writing every day Upon this inner page,

How bitter must it be to say Your heart grows worse with age! "Oh, ask him freely to forgive

The many faults he's seen; You cannot hope in heaven to live Unless you've pardoned been.

"And write your very best my boy! Ask Him to guide your hand; That every leaf will bring you joy, When you before Him stand !"

" SOUL DRIVING."

Under the above expressive title, Rev. Joseph Brooks, editor of the Central Christian Advocate describes some of the scenes connected with the gradual exodus of the slaves of Missouri into worse bondage at the South. He says:

" Day after day from our office window have we watched the slow, receding steps of these exiled ones, torn from home and kindered to drag out a wretched existence upon the sugar and cotton plantations of the extreme South, until we have turned away to suppress the tear and the sigh of Christian sympathy, in a fervent prayer to Him whose ear is open to the sighing of the prisoner and the prayer of the oppressed.

A few days since we made a tour through the State. Stopping at a village hotel after nightfall, we were ushered into the sitting-room occupied by a motley group. The railroad man was here with his earnest eastern business air, resolved upon the rapid extension of his line toward the gold fields of Jefferson, and on to the quiet Pacific. The relative practicability of different routes, and the amount of trade, and the number of towns and cities likely to spring up upon each, constitutthe staple of his thoughts and conversation. The village mechanic, with his day's labor ended, regaled himself with a 'Havana,' and complacently scanned the daily paper. The ambitious political partisan, in a boisterous tone, discussed the tendencies of parties, the struggle then in progress at the national capital over the speakership, and the political candidates for the presidency, spicing the whole with curses upon his opponents. But | apart from the general company, in a cozy corner and near one of the pillars of the building, we ob served a tall, boney, round-shouldered, burlynecked, bushy-headed fellow, engaged in close conversatiou, in a stealty tone, with one of the attaches of the establishment. The only vacant chair of the room was near, and fatigued with the journey of the day, we threw ourselves into it, to await the arrival of the next vehicle. As we did so, we observed our man from beneath his heavy dark eyebrows, cast at us a scrutinizing and half suspicious glance. At once we judged his business, and a moment more revealed the correctness of our supposition.

'That oldest boy,' he muttered, 'is the likeliest nigger I have bought this winter. I give thirteen hundred dollars for him; d-n me if I didn't. Say, that biggest gal is a cotton patch cled ? She'll bring a pile !"

The following day at one of the junctions we fell in with three other ' trading gentlemen. Each had a few, and a car was assigned the cargo. We walked through; we paused and contemplated the spectacle! Here were nearly half a hundred human beings, of both sexes and all ages, and shade of color, from the jet black African to a point—with one of the small children—where the sable was all faded out; and the little fellow on the street in a nothern village, dressed like his white neighbors, would not have been suspected as to the purity of his blood. In the centre of the car stood three of the proprietors ' comparing notes,' as to the several places of purchase, the range of prices, the prospects of sale at the different points South this brief inscription, "She always made home Caps, Ladies Furs, Robes Buffalo Skins ment of the different members of the gang.

is a constitutional disease, a corruption of the blood, by which this fluid becomes vitiated, weak, and poor. Being in the circulation it pervades the whole body, and may burst out in disease on any part of it. No organ is free from its attacks, nor is there one which it may not destroy. The scrofulous taint is variously caused by mercurial disease, low living, disordered or unhealthy food, impure a r, filth, and filthy habits, the depressing vices, and, above all, by the venereal infection.
