LINES ON THE BIRTH OF THE PRINCE OF WALES.

The following verses were published in the Fredericton Sentinal in December 1841, on the first announcement of the event to which they refer ; and the writer, since Editor of the New Brunswick Rporter, thinks the present a proper period for their republication.

It is needless to add that the lines which fol low them fix their own date, as well as their hasty composition.

JAMES HOGG. Streets many way to be showing Editor Reporter.

BRITANNIA ! bid thy thunders foar In mighty homage to the day ; High on the sea surrounded shore Bid the green waves exaulting play ; And let the standard proundly flow That never sank beneath a foe.

Then marshal forth the brave in arms Who make thy weal their constant care And bring thy daughters in their charms, First of their sex-surpassing fair -And let one strain their lips employ,-The tribute of a Nation's joy.

Bid Erin's hearts of love and war-Bid Scotia's hardy vet'rans rise ; Bid Ocean's loneliest rocks afar All send their plaudits to the skies ; And summer isles in eastern seas, Spread far and wide the spicy breeze.

The Islands o'er whose coral groves The South-sea-ocean spreads its foam, Where blest, retir'd, the native roves, Nor seeks remote, a happier home, Shall hear the news, and gladly own The Heir of Albion's pearl-built throne.

Hindostan's myriads load shall cheer The royal scion of Her Kings :--Columbian's loyal sont shall hear As in her woods the anthem rings ; And o'er the ocean's waste shall roll "God save the Prince !" from pole to pole.

Prince of the great ! no slave may share Thy country's genial clime with thee; Or if he breathe thy native air,

'Tis but to breathe it, and-BE FREE ;-The, sun, that ever gilds thy grounds, Sees not a slave within their bounds.

LINES ON THE ARRIVAL OF THE PRINCH OF WALES IN NEW BRUNSWICK.

THE bugle's sound-the Canon's roar Are heard on Albion's sea-washed shore, From Castle, crag, and sylvan dell, The thunder peals its loud farewell ; Round their white cliffs the billows sweep The PRINCE's ship is on the deep.

St. George's Ensign floats on high, In keeping with the summer sky, And many a streamer bright and gay, Buoy'd by the light winds on its way, Deep in the mighty ocean flings The shadow of its silken wings.

Full many a lady-many a knight-Worship'd in love-unmatched in fight-Yet on the distant margin lingers, Waving the scarf with dainty fingers, Or clasping with adhesive hand, The flag of England's honor'd land.

The scene is passing grand-but yet Not all unmingled with regret; For who that ever breath'd adieu To friend long tried, or lover true, Could press the lip or grasp the hand, And all unmoved—unmoving stand?

Beneath each warrior's iron crest, Within each maiden's trembling breast, Central in every human thing, From the lone peasant to the King,-Tell me, ye soul-dissecting seers, Have ye not found a place for tears?

Below, the living engines tread Their watery path-above are spread The spacious sails, and in their swell The winds are hush'd, as if to tell The story of their latest flight, And count the victims of their might.

The skies assume a deeper blue-The world of waves reflects their hue-

And lo ! the shouts from ranks on ranks, That lined old Tamar's bristling banks, Find echoes on our Pine-clad shores, As forth each fort and forest pours The tribute which affection brings To hail the scion of our Kings !

" Long live the Prince !" our Pæans ring, Honor'd be our prospective King, Who cross'd the Atlntic waves to find, Hearts true as those he left behind, Blending, with ever loyal aim Their freedom with VICTORIA's name.

Oh ! that in him the world may trace Each christian virtue, gift and grace, Which from old Albion's throne unfurl'd Have shed the lustrue o'er the world, Since first our Queed gave worth its crown, And wither'd vice with courtly frown.

Deninlinguin, a town fifty miles from here. I think that the aborigines of this country have been judged by very superficial observers. In all the remarks I have ever seea about them, the statement that they rank the lowest of the hu-man race I utterly deny. I know where to look for a Ecropean race exhibiting in its specimens much less natural judgment than the abused, ill-need, and libelled savage of Australia. I often sport hours in their company when we meet them up the river, and there is a degree of dig-them up the river, and there is a degree of dig-nity, of truth, of comprehensiveness; and of in-nity, of truth, of comprehensiveness; and of in-
