Over the River.

Over the river they beckon to me-Lov'd ones who've crossed to the further side The gleam of their snowy robes I see. But their voices are lost by the dashing tide. There's one with ringlets of sunny gold And eyes, the reflection of Heaven's own blue; He crossed in the twilight, gray and cold, And the pale mist hid him from mortal view. We saw not the angels that met him there, The gate of the city we could not see; Over the river, over the river, My brother stands waiting to welcome me !

Over the river the boatman pale Carried another, the houshold pet; Her brown curls waved in the gentle gale-Darling Minnie-I see her yet ! She crossed on her bosom her dimpled hands, And fearlessly entered the phantom bark : We watched it glide from the silver sands. And all our sunshine grew strangely dark. We know she is safe on the further side. Where all the ransomed and angels be; Over the river, the mystic river, My childhood's idol is waiting for me.

For hone return from those quiet shores Who cross with the boatman cold and pale; We hear the dip of the golden oars, And catch a gleam of the snowy sail, And lo! they have passed from our yearning hearts

They cross the stream and are gone for aye; We may not sunder the veil apart That hides from our vision the gates of day. We only know that their barks no more May sail with us o'er life's stormy sea, Yet, somewhere, I know, on the unseen shore, They watch, and beckon, and wait for me!

And I set and think when the sunset's gold Is flushing river and hill and shore. I shall one day stand by the water cold. And list for the sound of the boatman's oar. I shall watch for a gleam of the flapping sail; I shall hear the boat as it gains the strand : I shall pass from sight with the boatman pale, To the better shore of the spirit land. I shall know the loved who have gone before, And joyfully sweet will the meeting be, When over the river, the peaceful river, The Angel of Death shall carry me.

European Shepherds.

In Spain where the celebrated Merino flocks are bred, there are ten millions of sheep to be led, twice in a year to a great distance in search of pasture, or of a warmer climate. Forty or fifty thousand shepherds guide these sheep in long. their wanderings, and travel with them many hundred miles. Those shepherds have a very hard life, but they are so much attached to their flooks that they would not leave them, even if they could get better pay and less work elsewhere. As many as thirty thousand dogs accompany the flocks in their wanderings, and put up with hard fare like their masters. The Spanish shepherd lives chiefly on bread seasoned with oil or grease; and though they somtimes procure mutton from their old or diseased sheep, it is not their favorite food. Their dress is a jacket and breeches of black sheep skin, a red silken sash tied round the waist, long leather gaiters, a slouched hat, a staff with an iron point, and a manta or brown blanket slung over the left shoulder. When they have reached their journey's end, they build themselves rude huts, living generally a single life. Large flocks are managed by several shepherds, and that everything may be done with regularity, one of the most experienced is set over the rest. The times of their wanderings are in May and Septemper, and the whole journey is the same which has been taken for ages. The sheep know the way as well as their masters; and a free passage is granted to them through pastures, villages, ect., where the inhabitants are obliged to leave an opening for them, at least ninety paces wide. The shepherds on their part have to leave them as quickly as possible, that they may reach certain resting places where they find an open space and good pasture. In some parts of France the shepherds live a similar life. More than a hundred thousand sheep graze on the plains of Arles in winter; but as the spring approaches they show the greatest eagerness to set off toward the mountains bordering on Italy; and if not watched, they will escape and be lost. The shepherds set out in May for these mountains, driving their sheep in troops of from ten to forty thousand. To every thousand sheep three shepherds are allowed; each says I should never trust my own heart, for it Pins, Rubber Rattles, Drums, Beads, Clocks, Plated May for these mountains, driving their sheep in | mind all that is said to me. troops of from ten to forty thousand. The shepherd's dogs are assisted in a remarkable way in keeping these large flocks in order. The goats are especially trained for the purpose, and have bells around their necks. They are kept in perfect discipline by the shepherds, and show great intelligence in the porformance of their task. They halt or proceed at the word of command, and at the close of each day's march, they come to the centre of the flock, and wait there until the morning, when, having received their proper orders, they return to their station at the head of the flock with the greatest regularity. On coming to a stream, they halt until the word of command is given, when they plunge into the water, and are followed by the rest of the flock. When the flocks reach the mountains, each shepherd has his proper boundary marked out, and the proprietors of the land are paid about twenty pence per sheep for their feed during the summer. The shepherds sleep with their flocks in the open air, and live almost entirely on bread and goat's milk.

In the south-west of France, on those wide plains called Les Landes, the shepherds lead a
