CONSUMPTION. It is comforting to the Christian, amid all the complications of the times; to rest assured of this great truth—"All things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to His purpose." The fires of persecution purified the ancient Church; the scoffings of the ungodly in modern times raise the heart of the Christian above the desire of earthly praise; and the wars that many ere long wrap the world in carnage will infallibly work out the great and beneficent purposes of our God.
