STRANGE CEIME IN IRELAND. The Dublin correspondent of the N. Y. Ob-

A youth, scarcely of age, has stariled those most familiar with the romantic in guilt by a crime, in its perpetration, antecedent, and accompaniments, so unusual, as that the relation of it sounds more like fiction than reality. Joseph Dwyer, son of a respectable provision merchant of King street, in this city, having re ceived a suitable elementary education, was entered in the Roman Catholic University, Stephens Green, with a view to the priesthood. His habits and conduct, however, compelled his dismission; and his father set him up at once, and a second time, in business. But depravity, though he was but nineteen, had gained absolute mastery over him; and other sources being exhausted, he took to robbery and murder to supply the means of gratifying his abominable inclinations. He hired an empty stable, purchased a pickaxe and shovel, and dug a grave, six feet long, four broad, and four deep. He buildings, joined to the mainland by quaint but formation, and the special influences of the Holy bayonet, and plenty of powder and ball. He then went to the celebrated clothier's, Hyam, purchased a quantity of fashionable apparel, to den. He attempted to shoot him, but the victim caught his fingers into his mouth; and the yelling and confusion gave opportunity for his | water's edge, the walk was carried past them on escape. On getting out he called the police, but a light and beau iful stone terrace overhanging the assassin had disappeared. He has been the lake. The high mountains of Tartary formsince captured, is committed for trial, and the defence is to be insanity; which, if succes-ful, will at least immure him for life.

The rumoured departure of the French fleet from Gaeta has been contradicted. It is now stated that a Russian frigate, fully armed, has anchored off Gaeta and suspicion is of course awakened that this event is the first sympton of the rumoured intention of Russia to supply the protection France is about to withdraw. It seems, however, somewhat premature to draw any decided inference from the bare fact
