GREAT FEARS are entertained that the naval expedition, or "Northern Armada" as it is called, may have suffered severely in the terrible rather the object of attack. News is hourly looked for relative to the results of this immense naval enterprise. Should it have suffered from statement. the gale it would seem as though Pr vidence favors the South.

Gen. M'Clellan's movements thus far have been characterized by extreme caution -a qualitv. perhaps, which was required by the exigency of the times. He has shown great powers of organization, but that organization has not even vet been brought to the highest state of efficiency. t now remains to be proved whether he is possessed of that strategic skill, that power of the mainiainment of order. weilding great masses, and throwing them with entitle him to be enrolled among the great commanders. In front, Beauregard has withdrawn to England need only look to India for cotton. his entrenchments, about Manassas Junction. and is busily engaged preparing his winter quarters. The nature of the intervening ground, between the hostile camps, is impracticable for the manæuvring of a large force; and his position, I have reason to believe, is so strong that it can be destroyed only by regular approaches. which is a slow and tedious process. In the meanwhile, his communications with the South and West are such that he can concentrate men and munitions by rail, quite as rapidly as we can by the common roads of the country. It then becomes reducedd to a question of superiority of resources, at a point of eligibility, of the enemy's selection. I therefore predict that this period for field operations is rapidly drawing to war. That it would soon be silenced is certain; jects are satisfied with him, it is no business a close; the country is anxious to derive some but it could not be silenced until much injury of ours. They have had a Royal gloss on the money, and this assemblage of men and armaments. Capitalists begin to speculate as to the ultimate value of their investments, and the subalterns complain that thus far they have been compelled to handle the shovel rather than the musket. The blockade of the Potomac, and the obstruction of the canal, meanwhile seriously interfere with the suplies of the army. Coal, forage, provisions, are all compelled to seek a transit over the single track of the Baltimore and Ohio Railway. The blockade must be raised as a military necessity, and I predict that the first blow will be in that direction.

THE POSITION ON THE POTOMAC.-We confess that we expected the preparation of General McClellen on he Potomac would result in victory whenever the Federal and Secession forces should again come into collision. This expectation was based on the acknowleged excellence of the material of his army, and on his generally acknow-ledged ability as a commander. His resources army, any he has incomparably a better cause to fight for. Yet, with all these advantages, we have in the battle of Edward's Ferry, or Leeserior, and the utmost that could be done by the national force was, after some heroic fighting, to save a portion of themselves by a hurried retreat. In fact, to make a good retreat appears trolled by the government at Washington, can award them, and that not always with justice. It was not thus that the fathers of these Nor hern so diers fought in their struggles with the French or with the mother country. Is it a presumptuous attempt to interpret the providence and purposes of God, to see in all this only a repetition of the plagues which were sent upon Egypt to induce that people to let their bondmen go? It is true the Northern States have no bondmen, but it is equally true that they been indentified with and sustained the most extensive oppressive system of bondage known to history, and that they still refuse to do what they can to free themselves from this inhuman and degrading position. The article concludes by saying it would ill become England to be the tool of Southern machinations, which, by withholding cotton, count on compelling foreign nations to ake her side in the quarrel.
