It is seldom that the English Wesleyan Conference has to deal with heresy. This year such an instance occurred. Mr. Rouse, for thirty years a minister. has published a volume entitled "Man Contemplated," in which he advances the doctrine that if parents are wholly sanctified, their children are born pure, and free from the taint of original sin. A year was allowed him for the reconsideration of these views, but he has not altered them. A discussion arose upon his case, which however, was cut short by his voluntary withdrawal from connection with the Conference. It does not appear that he has made a single convert, either among the ministers or the laity.

According to French papers, an edict has been published in China, which recommends to the people the practice of full toleration. In the large cities the Imperial Government has for some time been able to secure the freedom of religious worship, and little doubt need be felt that it will earnestly strive to put a stop to religious persecutions throughout the empire. China has never felt itself more dependent on the great Christian powers of Europe than at present, and we may therefore expect that the success hitherto gained by the Christian missionaries will be nothing in comparison with the bright prospects now opening.
