A MOTHER'S LAST WORDS: OR, THE OR-PHANS OF LONDON STREETS.

BY MRS. SEWELL .- SECOND PART.

The second week was bleak and cold, A drizzling rain fell day by day, And with their wet umbrellas up, The people hurried on their way.

And no one thought about the boys, Who patiently stood sweeping there; And sometimes over Christy's face There fell a shade of black despair.

Discouraged, wet, and weary oft, Cold, shivering, to their bed they crept; But still all night, that Angel bright, Stood by to guard them as they slept.

And these poor boys would sleep as well As rich men on their beds of down, And wake up with a lighter heart Than many a king who wears a crown.

But winter time came on apace, And colder still the weather grew, And when they left the street at night, Their clothes were often wetted through.

Their coats were almost worn to rags, Their bare feet went upon the stones; But still they always went to church, And to the school on afternoons.

And never joined with wicked boys, And never stopped away to play, But tried to do their very best, And swept the crossing every day.

One day a boy came up and said, "I know a dodge worth two of that; Just take to picking pockets, lad, And don't hold out that ragged hat."

"What, thieve!" said little Christopher, "Our dodge is twice as good as that, We earn our bread like honest folks;" And so he answered, tit for tat.

"Well, that's your own look out, of course: For my part, I don't see the fun Of starving at this crossing here, When money is so easy won.'

"How do you manage that?" said John. "Oh! come with us, we'll have you taught You've but a trick or two to learn, To grip the thing, and not be caught."

"But if you should be caught?" said John, "The end of that would spoil your fun." "Oh! we know how to manage that; Come on, I'll show you lfow 'tis done."

"What do you get to eat?" said John, Who pondered on these boasting words. "What get to eat !- just what we choose-We eat and drink away like lords.

"Now, what d'ye say ?-make up your mind; I'm waited for, and must be gone, We've pretty work to-day, on hand."

"Well, I shan't help to-day," said John.

"The more fool you," replied the boy, And went off whistling down the street; And black as night, a wicked Sprite, Went after him with rapid feet.

John went back slowly to his place, And grumbling to himself, he said, "I half repent, I didn't go, It is so hard to earn one's bread.

"I dare say, he gets in a day As much as we earn in a week: I wish I'd gone." John muttered this; To Christopher he did not speak.

At night, as he went sauntering home, He loitered round a pastry cook's, Till Christy called, "John, come along, You'll eat the cakes up with your looks."

"Well, Chris, I say 'tis very hard, We never have good things to eat; I'm tired of nothing else than bread, I long for something nice and sweet."

"They do look nice," said little Chris, And lingering near, with hankering eyes "Which would you have, John, if you could? I'd have these jolly Christmas pies."

John answered in a grumbling tone, "Oh! I don't know, so let 'em be; Some boys do get nice things to eat; Not honest boys, like you and me."

"Well, never mind," said little Chris, "You're out of sorts this evening, John; We'll both be rich maybe some day, And then we'll eat 'em up like fun,"

"No chance of that, for us," said John, "Our feet are now upon the stones; We can't earn food and clothing too, And you are only skin and bones."

"'Tis hard to work and not to cat; But John you would not do what's bad!" "No; I don't mean to thieve-not I; But when thieves feast, it makes one mad."

And so John grumbled day by day, And longed for something good to eat. And sometimes looked out for the boy

Who went off whistling down the street; And oh! indeed, 'twas very hard, When tired, hungry, cold and wet,

To pass by all the eating shops, That looked so tempting in the street: To see the people going in,

To buy the sausage-rolls and pies, Whilst they could only stand outside, And look at them with longing eyes.

'Twas hard to see the smoking meat, And smell the vapors floating round Of roasting joints, and savory steaks, From steaming kitchens under-ground.

And sometimes little Christy cried, When, limping on with chilblained toes, He saw fine windows full of boots, And children's shoes in shining rows.

But still he never would complain, And sometimes said, if John was sad, "We got on bravely yesterday, Why should you take to moping lad?

"But, John, I think if you and I Were rich, as these great people are, We'd just look out for orphan boys, And give them nice warm clothes to wear."

"Just so," said John, "and we would give Poor little sweepers in the street A famous lot of half-pennies, To buy them something good to eat.

"They'd never miss the little things, That would make kings of me and you; I wish that we were rich men, Chris, We'd show 'em what rich men should do,"

One night, between the dark and light, As they were going down a lane, And Christopher, with bleeding feet, Was slowly hobbling on with pain.

John saw some shoes outside a door,-"They'll just keep my poor Christy warm!" And quick as thought, he snatched them up, And tucked them underneath his arm.

Then pale as ashes grew his face, And sudden fears rushed on his mind, He hurried on with quicker pace, Lest some one should be close behind.

"Do stop a bit," his brother cried, "Don't be in such a hurry, John." John darted round a frightened look, And from a walk began to run.

He thought he heard the cry of "Thief," And swifter down the street he fled; And black as night, a wicked Sprite, With rapid feet behind him sped.

The cry of "Thief" was in his ears, Through all the bustle and the din; And when he reached his lodging-house, The wicked spirit followed in.

He sat down pale, and out of breath, And locked the door into the street, And trembled when he only heard The sound of little Christy's feet.

"There, Christy, boy—there's shoes for you, And now you'll cut away like fun; Come, let us see how well they fit-Just give a tug, and they'll be on."

Then Christopher did laugh outright, 'Hurra!-hurra!-now I am shod; But John where did you get the shoes?" John put him off, and gave a nod.

The little boy was tired out, And quickly to his bed he crept, And knew not that a wicked Sprite Scowled on his brother as he slept,

John could not rest; the faintest noise Made all the flesh upon him creep, He turned and turned, and turned again, But could not get a wink of sleep.

He strained his ears to catch the sound Of footsteeps in the silent night, And when they came close by the door, His hair almost rose up with fright,

At last his fear became so great, That in a cold, damp sweat he lay, And then the thought came in his mind, That he had better try and pray.

"They tell us, at the Sunday-school, That we must beg to be forgiven; My mother used to say the same, Before she went away to heaven.

"I wish I'd let the shoes alone; I wonder what I'd better do!-If I should take them back again, Poor Christy would not have a shoe.

"Though I don't think he'd care for that, For he's a better boy than I, And he would sooner starve to death Than steal a thing or tell a lie.

"Are you asleep, Chris? Can't you wake? I want to tell you something bad; I've counted all the hours to-night; I say, Chris, can't you wake up, lad?"

Just then, the child screamed in his sleep, And started upright in his bed;-"Are you there, John? Who's in the room?

Oh, John! I dreamt that you were dead.

"I'm glad enough that I woke up, I'm glad you're all alive and well; I'd such an ugly dream-I saw The devil taking you to hell."

"And so he will, If I don't mind, As far as that, your dream is right; And as to going off to hell, I think I've been in hell all night."

"What have you done?"-"Why, stole some shoes, That very pair I gave to you; But I can't rest about it, Chris, I want to know what we shall do?"

"Why, take them back, of course," said Chris, "And put them where they were before; Let's go at once."—" No, stop," said John,
"The clock has only just struck four.

"There's no one stirring in the street, The shops will not be opened yet, And we should have to wait about For hours in the cold and wet.

"And now, that I've made up my mind, I don't feel half so much afraid." Then took to flight that evil Sprite,

And John lay down his weary head. At six o'clock the boys went out, The snow was falling in the street,

And through the bitter morning air, They ran along with naked feet. They watched the busy town wake up, Undoing shutter, bolt, and bar;

But full two hours they stopped about Before that door was set ajar.

John quickly slipped the shoes inside, And then as quickly walked away, the time the town was burnt (now more than fifty years ago), that an old man, without any family, had accumulated a large amount of money, in gold and silver, which he kept in an iron chest. As the fire approached, his distress was inexpressible; he ran to his treasure, but it was so heavy that he could not move it, and no one dared venture in to assist him. He then threw his arms around the chest, and perished with his money

Another gentleman relates the following: A man in Pennsylvania, who began life poor, but was determined to be rich, lived to be old, and had become rich in money and land. He too had no family. At length he was taken sick, and sent | Nov 7.

for a physician, who honestly told him that he could not live but a very short time. His only reply was, "Oh, if I could only live fifteen years I could get all Chester County," soon after which he expired.

What infatuation—this love of riches! On high authority we are warned against the deceitfulness of riches, and the love of the world.

THE FOLLY OF ATHEISM.—You have often heard the brilliant Dr. C-, of whom the late Prof. Bush once so wittily remarked, when some one was asking the explanation of the first grand shower of meteoric stars, "Oh! I can explain it easily: it is only Dr. C---'s brain burst open." | Bo Well, being once in ----, we went, on Sabbath morning, to the church then under his pastoral care, having some curiosity to hear him.

After a brief invocation at the opening of the service, he read, from the Scriptures, the fiftythird Psalm, beginning, "The fool hath said in his heart, 'There is no God.'" "Ha!" said he, in a tone of mingled indignation and triumph, "Nobody but a fool would say that." "He said it in his heart, not in his head—he knew better," was his second comment; while the third, equally striking, was, "The words 'there is,' you will notice, are in italics, thus showing they are not in the original, so that he does not say, 'There is similar Institution, is invited. no God,' but 'No God.' He wished there was none: he knew there was."-N. Y. Observer.
