life, on the Edinburgh and Glasgow railroad. high-handed acts of the King.

At a dinner of the Worcestershire Agricultural

Association, held at Worcester, Lord Norwich in the interval of rest, a working man came forward, who,

Sir John Pakington, after explaining that he thought the rule excluding politics applied merely to party politics, spoke on American affairs. He did not believe (he said) that in Europe there was any one who had a head to think and a heart to feel, who had not been filled with horror at the manner in which human blood was being shed, human misery being created, and every element of national prosperity being destroyed in that aimless and profitless war, with a recklessness which caused feelings of the deepest disapprobation in Europe. He believed that those feelings were universal, and he maintained that he was not touching upon party matters, when, as an avowed opponent of the present Government, he said that he was perfectly willing to give it credit for the caution with which they had acted in this delicate matter. He imputed no blame to them. He acknowledged the great difficulty of the question which they had to decide; but, on the other hand, they had all a right to think for themselves, and he spoke for himself alone when he said that he considered that the time was now come when some effort ought to be made by the great Powers of Europe to put an end to that fearful struggle. He thought the time was come when not England alone, but England in conjunction with France, and possibly with Russia, ought to offer mediation in America, of course on the basis of separation, and on the understanding that if mediation was not accepted, recognition must follow. He could not help expressing hope, after reading what was reported to have fallen from Mr. Gladstone at Newcastle, on the preceding evening, that Mr. Jefferson Davis had created a nation in the Southern States of America. Those words, as coming from the lips of a cabinet minister, were words of grave significance, and he did hope he was not too sanguine in drawing from that the inference that the present feeling of Her Majesty's Government did not differ very widely from that feeling which he had taken the liberty of expressing. They must remember their own interests, irrespective of general feelings of humanity, and he might say the general feelings of civilized nrtions-there were especial interests immediately touching the welfare of this

But the most important utterance on the subject is that of the Secretary at War-Sir G. C. Lewis, at the Herefordshire Agricultural Society. After discussing some local topics, and referring to the distress in Lancashire, he passed on to the subject of America:

In addition to this, about 15 men were or assistance to either of the belligerent parties. (Hear, hear.) It had been said that great complaints had been made by the Government at Washington that the Government of England had not maintained this strict neutrality, because it had recognized the South as a belligerent Power, and it had been said that by recognizing the South as a belligerent Power we had departed from a strict line of neutrality. Now he (Sir G. Lewis) could not but think that if any impartial person reflected on the course of this unhappy contest he would come to the conclusion that no word of the English language would apply with greater aptitude to the Southern States than the word 'belligerent.' Here parties had combined for the purpose of carrying on a war, and when they looked to the number of armed men they had raised, when they looked to the large armies they had brought into the field, to the ability of the generals by whom those armies were commanded, and to the pertinacity with which the contest on their part had been waged, it could not surely be denied that they deserved the name of 'belligerent' in reference to the manner in which they had carried on the war against the United States. Under these circumstances it seemed to him (Sir G. Lewis) that a more unfounded charge could not have been made against the Government of this country than that of having departed from the principle of strict neutrality by recognising the Southern States as beiligerents. or 6000 people were flying across the park, spreading fear and confusion around, and then they returned to the mound. This occurred again and again, women being sometimes thrown down and trampled upon, Public opinion in England inclines very decidedly and strong men compelled to turn and fly, till the wonder was that serious injuries were not inflicted upon many. Then, at short intervals; whenever the police fixed their eyes upon some prominent aggressor, they made a plunge into the surging mass, and resolutely brought out their man, generally, but not Prussia is greatly agitated in consequence of the always, succeeding in conveying him away in safe custody. The Guards having firmly established their supremacy, quiet reigned at one time for about a quarter of an hour, and, taking advantage of this in a brief speech, denounced the Emperor of the French, concluding by calling for "three cheers for Garibaldi," which were heartily given; and when he asked those present who sympathised with Garibaldi to hold up their hands, a forest of hands was immediately held up. Then another speaker followed, who said enough had been done. "It had been made plain to the world that the feelings of the people of London were in favor of the great patriot Garibaldi, and with that assurance they might settle down without any more speeches." This speaker had hardly concluded when the tumult was renewed, the mound being lost and won several times, and the stampedes through the park followed close upon each other, while conflicts with sticks and stones were frequent. Several knives were drawn, and one formidable weapon, apparently a shoemaker's knife, with a wooden handle, and a blade nine inches long, was taken from a man who said he found it lying on the grass. During one of the assaults upon the mound, a corporal in the Coldstreams had his bayonet snatched from its sheath; and later in the afternoon, when it was recovered, the Irishman who had taken it was soundly thrashed, and threatened with a ducking in the Serpentine, towards which he was carried by several soldiers, who, however, yielded to the persuasions of others, and permitted him to go at large. About half-past five two strong pickets, one of Grenadiers and one of Fusiliers, marched into the park, for the purpose of taking off the men belonging to their respective battalions. They marched straight to the mound, and, just as they ascended it, a soldier received a terrific blow on the head from a thick club, wielded by an Irishman. The blood ran down the face of the soldier, who was carried away in a fainting condition-his assailant escaping by plunging into a mass of his sympathising countrymen. After that the pickets cleared the mound, of which they held possession till a body of police approached, half an hour later. From that time the police held the mound, and although there was a good deal of disorderly and tumultuous rushing to and fro, with an occasional scuffle, and wholesale destruction of hats, the fear of any serious outbreak was past. The people had begun to disperse at 5 o'clock, when a few drops of rain fell, and the crowd gradually thinned afterwards; but a fine moonlight night was the means of prolonging the demonstration, and at seven o'clock there were still some thousands of people moving on the ground, and it was late before the park was restored to its usual state. As the result of the fray, in addition to the soldier whose head was broken, as before mentioned, 15 people were com-"The Government of this country was placed in pelled to visit St. George's Hospital. GARIBALDI.—The Foreign correspondent to Zion's Herald says :-

The howl of delight which was raised in certain quarters at the defeat of Garibaldi, has found no response in the breasts of the people. On the Continent, no less than in England, his misfortunes have touched all generous hearts, and none but cold-blooded politicians or Neapolitan Bourbons have had the unfeeling effrontery to mock his fallen fortunes.

Garibaldi, defeated, wounded, and a prisoner, is still, in the opinion of all honest and sympathetic men, the glorious hero and the high minded patriot. His blood only tends to consecrate his mission, and glorify his cause. In his captivity he resembles the Scottish patriot Wallace, when he was basely betrayed into the hands of his enemies. The character of the great Scottish liberator sinnes none the less brightly, in the eye of posterity, because nov 6.—wpi

THE EMPIRE OF HEALTH. -- WHO WIELDS ITS SCEP-TRE. - Universal Empire has been the darling object of scores of despots, dynasties and states, from the time of the Pharaohs to that of Napoleon le Grand. Seas of blood have been shed to attain it, and the bones of myriads who have been slaughtered in the pursuit of this chimera, would, if they could be collected in one mass, overtop the highest peak of the Himalayan mountains. Rome came nearest the consummation, yet even she was never, in truth, the absolute "Mistress of the World."

Yet there is a species of universal empire which has been attained. It is an empire not over the souls and bodies of mankind, but over their diseases, The conqueror who has achieved this grand result is Doccourses, viz., recognition of the Southern States on man who had been stabbed in the thigh, it is said, believe that he has done so by vouchers from all parts tor Holloway, of London; at least we are taught to and they are (so "crowds of witnesses" assure us) universally successful.

"A Subscriber" and perhaps well wishing friend vrites us to enquire " why we advertise patent medicines." We will here and now answer him that we do not. Our eaders are aware that we have for years excluded everything of the sort, and the only seeming exception that we know of is the advertisement of Doct. J. C. Ayer & Co's remedies which now stands in our columns. If our friend does not know we will inform him that these are not "patent" or even secret medicines. Their composition has been made as publicly known as any other scientific fact and has moreover had the approval of the highest medical authorities in the land. But what affords us perhaps still greater confidence in their worth is our personal knowledge of the man who makes them, and the results that have followed from their use: results as familiar to our readers and to the whole community as they are to ourselves.

It has been our privilege to know Doct. Aver ever since he graduated from the Penn. University in the same class with one of our personal friends, nor have we ever ceased to watch with interest his singular success in and untiring tevotion to the noble profession he has chosen. If anybody will tell us what we can advertise of more interest to our patrons than remedies that will cure them when they are sick we shall cheerfully give it the benefit of our circulation.—Tumarora (111) Baptist.
