But there are all the sources of permanent wealth-all the elements of abiding prosperity-in the region that river, with its sixty tributaries-the mountains that soften from rugged heights to well-wooded slopes -the plains that stretch in fertile amplitude to the Pacific-the beds of coal below the soil-the forests of oak and pine above the gardens, and orchards, and farms, that in a few years have arisen under the spell of enterprising industry on the site of the wigwam or the trail of the hunter-the chain of lakes to be hereafter connected by railways and canals-the natural highway from the mouth of the St. Lawrence to the Straits of Juan de Fuca-the feeding-ground of countless flocks and herds-the harbours in which great fleets may ride-the territory three times as large as Great Britain, with its ocean stepping-stone half as large as Ireland-the good order that prevails even among the mining population-the large wages that are paid for mechanical and agricultural labour, while food is comparatively cheap-the civilising influence of churches, schools, and newspapers ;these are all guarantees of solid and enduring welfare. UNITED STATES.

The great event of the past week is the capture of New Orleans, by the expedition under the command of Gen. Butler. The gunboats appear to have passed the forts upon which the citizens relied for defence, without difficulty, and the city was then at their mercy. Only nine hours intervened between their passage of forts Jackson and St. Philips and their arrival, but it afforded time for the destruction of an immense supply of merchandize and a large number of steamboats. Martial law was put in full force. All coin and ammunition are said to have been sent off to a place of safety. The effect of this on the Southern cause must be disastrous.-Ch. Wit:
