POETRY.

HYMN.

How much owest thou unto my Lord?—Luke xvi. 5.

When this passing world is done,
When has sunk yon glaring sun,
When we stand with Christ in glory,
Looking o'er life's finished story,
Then, Lord, shall I fully know—
Not till then—how much I owe.

When I stand before the throne,
Dressed in beauty not my own,
When I see Thee as Thou art,
Love Thee with unsinning heart,
Then Lord, shall I fully know—
Not till then—how much I owe.

When the praise of Heaven I hear,
Loud as thunders to the ear,
Loud as many waters' noise,
Sweet as harp's melodious voice,
Then, Lord, shall I fully know—
Not till then—how much I owe.

—McCheyne.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A LESSON FOR PARENTS.

L. Gaylord Clarke, the former Editor of the Knickerbocker, in a letter about children, says:

But I desire now to narrate to you a circumstance which happened in the family of a friend and correspondent of mine in the city of Boston, some ten years ago, the history of which will commend itself to the heart of every father and mother who has any sympathy with, or affection for, their children. That it is entirely true, you may be well assured. I was convinced of this when I opened the letter from L. H. B——, which announced it, and in the detail of the event which was subsequently furnished me.

A few weeks before he wrote he had buried his eldest son, a fine, manly little fellow, of some eight years of age, who had never, he said, known a day's illness until that which finally removed him hence to be here no more. His death occurred under circumstances which were peculiarly painful to his parents. A younger brother, a delicate, sickly child from its birth, the next in age to him, had been down for nearly a fortnight with an epidemic fever. In consequence of the nature of the disease, every precaution had been adopted that prudence suggested to guard the other members of the family against it. But of this one, the father's eldest, he said he had little to fear, so rugged was he and so generally healthy. Still, however, he kept a vigilant eye upon him, and especially forbade his going into the pools and docks near his school, which it was his custom sometimes to visit; for he was but a boy, and, "boys will be boys," and we ought more frequently to think that it is their nature to be. Of all unnatural things, a reproach almost to childish frankness and innocence, save me from a "boy man?" But to the story.

One evening this unhappy father came home, wearied with a long day's hard labour, and vexed at some little disappointments which had soured his naturally kind disposition, and rendered him peculiarly susceptible to the smallest annoyance. While he was sitting by the fire, in this unhappy mood of mind, his wife entered the apartment, and said:

"Henry has just come in, and he is a perfect fright! He is covered from head to foot with dock-mud, and he is as wet as a drowned rat!"

"Where is he?" asked the father sternly.

"He is shivering over the kitchen fire. He was afraid to come up here when the girl told him you had come home."

"Tell Jane to tell him to come here this instant!" was the brief reply to this information.

Presently the poor boy entered, half perished with affright and cold. His father glanced at his sad plight, reproached him bitterly with his disobedience, spoke of the punishment which awaited him in the morning, as the penalty for his offence; and in a harsh voice concluded with:

"Now, sir, go to your bed!"

"But, father," said the little fellow, "I want to tell you——"

"Not a word, sir; go to bed!"

"I only wanted to say, father, that——"

With a peremptory stamp, an imperative wave of his hand toward the door, and a frown upon his brow, did that father, without other speech, again close the door of explanation and expostulation.

When the boy had gone supperless and sad to his bed, the father sat restless and uneasy while supper was being prepared, and at tea-table ate but little. His wife saw the real cause, or the additional cause of his emotion, and interposed the remark:

"I think, my dear, you ought at least to have heard what Henry had to say. My heart ached for him when he turned away, with his eyes full of tears. Henry is a good boy, after all, if he does sometimes do wrong. He is a tender-hearted, affectionate boy. He always was."

And therewithal the water stood in the eyes of that forgiving mother, even as it stood in the eyes of Mercy, in "the house of the Interpreter," as recorded by Bunyan.

After tea, the evening paper was taken up; but there was no news and nothing of interest for that father in the journal of that evening. He sat for some time in an evidently painful reverie, and then rose and repaired to his bed-chamber. As he passed the bedroom where his little boy slept, he thought he would look in upon him before retiring to rest. He crept to his low cot and bent over him. A big tear had stolen down the boy's cheek and rested upon it; but he was sleeping calmly and sweetly. The father deeply regretted his harshness as he gazed upon his son; but he felt also the "sense of duty;" yet in the night, talking the matter over with the lad's mother, he resolved and promised, instead of punishing, as he had threatened, to make amends to the boy's aggrieved spirit in the morning for the manner in which he had repelled all explanation of his offence.

But that morning never came to the poor child in health. He awoke the next morning with a raging fever on his brain, and wild with delirium. In forty-eight hours he was in his shroud. He knew neither his father nor his mother, when they were first called to his bedside, nor at any moment afterward. Waiting, watching for one token of recognition, hour after hour, in speechless agony, did that unhappy father bend over the couch of his dying son. Once indeed, he thought he saw a smile of recognition light up his dying eye, and he leaned eagerly forward, for he would have given worlds to have whispered one kind word in his ear, and have been answered; but that gleam of apparent intelligence passed quickly away, and was succeeded by the cold, unmeaning glare, and the wild tossing of the fevered limbs, which lasted until death came to his relief.

Two days afterward the undertaker came with the little coffin, and his son, a playmate of the deceased boy, bringing the low stools on which it was to stand in the entry hall.

"I was with Henry," said the lad, "when he got into the water. We were playing down at the Long Wharf, Henry, and Frank Mumford, and I; and the tide was out very low; and there was a beam run out from the wharf; and Charles got out on it to get a fish-line and hook that hung over where the water was deep; and the first thing we saw, he had slipped off, and was struggling in the water! Henry threw off his cap and jumped clear from the wharf into the water, and after a great deal of hard work, got Charles out; and they waded up through the mud to where the wharf was not so wet and slippery; and then I helped them to climb up the side. Charles told Henry not to say anything about it, for if he did his father would never let him go near the water again. Henry was very sorry; and, all the way going home, he kept saying:

"What will father say when he sees me to-night? I wish we had not gone to the wharf!"

"Dear, brave boy!" exclaimed the bereaved father; "and this was the explanation which I so cruelly refused to hear!" And hot and bitter tears rolled down his cheeks.

Yes! that stern father now learned, and for the first time, that what he had treated with unwonted severity as a fault, was but the impulse of a generous nature, which, forgetful of self, hazarded life for another. It was but the quick prompting of that manly spirit which he himself had always endeavoured to graft upon his susceptible mind, and which, young as he was, had already manifested itself on more than one occasion.

Let me close this story in the very words of that father, and let the lesson sink deep into the hearts of every parent who shall peruse this sketch:

"Everything that I now see, that ever belonged to him, reminds me of my lost boy. Yesterday, I found some rude pencil-sketches which it was his delight to make for the amusement of his younger brother. To-day, in rummaging an old closet, I came across his boots, still covered with dock-mud, as when he last wore them. (You may think it strange, but that which is usually so unsightly an object, is now 'most precious to me.') And every morning and evening I pass the ground where my son's voice rang the merriest among his playmates.

"All these things speak to me vividly of his active life; but I cannot—though I have often tried—I cannot recall any other expression of the dear boy's face than that mute, mournful one with which he turned from me on the night I so harshly repulsed him. * * Then my heart bleeds afresh!

"Oh how careful should we all be that in our daily conduct towards those little beings sent us by a kind Providence, we are not laying up for ourselves the sources of many a future bitter tear. How cautious that, neither by inconsiderate nor cruel word or look, we unjustly grieve their generous feeling! And how guardedly ought we to weigh every action against its motive, lest, in a moment of excitement, we be led to mete out to the venial errors of the heart the punishment due only to wilful crime?

"Alas! perhaps few parents suspect how often the fierce rebuke, the sudden blow, is answered in their children by the tears, not of passion, not of physical or mental pain, but of a loving yet grieved or outraged nature!"

"BLIND TOM" THE "NATURAL PIANIST."

The Atlantic Monthly gives an account of a singular negro lad in Georgia, who though blind, partially idiotic, and repulsive in his appearance, nevertheless, has a soul overflowing with music; and who without teaching or training can play the most difficult pieces on the piano. The account says:—

"This blind negro boy is the slave of a Georgia planter, who bought him with his mother, the cub of a baby being thrown into the bargain, not as a chattel of any supposed value, but because the good-hearted buyer hated to separate the mother and child. The boy was not only blind, but of the lowest negro type, thick lipped, monkey-headed, and every way a singularly-repulsive little being. But the planter bought him, and the boy ate his master's "hog and hominy," led a wholly animal existence, grew fat, but did nothing, and was considered to be worth nothing, till he became six or seven years old. One night the family was awakened by the sound of music, and listening they found it came from their own drawing-room. It was blind Tom, who had climbed upon the piano stool, and was fingering the keys of the instrument, playing with a marvellous accuracy the tunes he had heard the young ladies of the family perform. He was almost mad with delight, and when he had finished a tune would clap his hands and kick his heels and laugh his hoarse laugh in a kind of savage ecstasy. Tom became forthwith a wonder, and was exhibited to the neighbors. He began to live in his music. To deprive him of it was like refusing him food. He played everything. Hearing even the most difficult music but once he could promptly reproduce it with hardly a hesitating note. Yet he could no more read the musical notation than letters. His master saw a fortune in this ugly specimen of man property, and exhibited him in all the Southern cities, large audiences gathering to listen to his wonderful playing. He was not brought North, for fear in our free latitudes his owner's property in him might not be respected. He was tested with the most complicated music, but never conquered. He had only once to hear the composition to repeat it, in most cases with more vigor and expression than it had been rendered to him. No matter how long, how difficult, or how new the piece, Tom mastered it immediately.

"But the strangest exhibition of the musical inspiration of this coarse, ill-made, half-idiotic boy, was in his improvisations. Though the music he dictated was in no way remarkable, only pleasant little waltzes, marches, and polkas, he would improvise the wildest, the saddest, the most wailing strains of a marvellous beauty, as if, as the author of the sketch of him says, there were enchained within the beastly form a spirit of heavenly mould, which struggled for its freedom, and wailed for its abiding-place.

How shall we explain this wondrous jewel in the head of the toad? Does it not suggest the thought that maybe within all idiotic men, confined, bound down, incapable even of finding such a medium of expression as the Dacreon in this poor negro boy has found in music, there is an intelligent, feeling suffering soul whom God thus imprisons to release in the light of another life? Blind Tom must awaken in all thoughtful minds new ideas as to the spiritual constitution of man, and perhaps, studying the strange phenomena presented in him, we may obtain some gleam of light to throw upon the vexed question of the relation to each other of soul, mind, physical organization.—heart, head, and body."

HEATHEN LANDS.

A HYMN FOR CHILDREN.

I often think of heathen lands,
Far away!
Where many a pagan temple stands;
And there each helpless child is led
To bow to idol gods its head,
While many a muttering charm is said,
Far away!
But I will pray that God would send,
Far away!
Glad tidings of my Saviour friend,
Far away!
And every little I can spare,
Shall help to send the Bible there,
And men of God the truth to bear,
Far away!
And when the silver trumpet swells,
Far away!
And all the love of Jesus tells——
Far away!
Then idols shall, like Dagon, fall,
And many a child on God shall call,
And own my Saviour—Lord of all,
Far away!

FURS! FURS!—Ladies!—The Subscriber would most respectfully invite the Ladies of St. John and the Province generally, to visit his Establishment and inspect his stock of Furs, believing they will pronounce it to be the Largest, Richest, and Best, ever exhibited in this City, as neither pains nor expense have been spared in making it so.
As the Fur trade is different from almost all others, and as the articles are intended not only for comfort but durability, purchasers should be careful in making their selections, and examine and see where the best Goods can be found, remembering the old adage that "A poor article is dear at any price."
Gentlemen in want of a good Fur Coat, Cap, Collar, or Gloves, will find a good assortment at this Establishment.
Military Gentlemen will find a good assortment of Russia, Persia, Astrican Lamb, and Fur Trimming, together with Buffalo and Fancy Sleigh Robes, in their proper season.
Furs made, altered, and repaired.
Cash, and the highest price paid for Shipping Furs.

THE ROYAL INSURANCE COMPANY 92, Lombard-street, London, and Royal Insurance-buildings, Liverpool.
Chairman of the London Board.—Samuel Baker, Esq.
Chairman in Liverpool.—Charles Turner, Esq.
The Royal Insurance Company is one of the largest Offices in the kingdom.
At the Annual Meeting held in August 1859, the following highly satisfactory results were shown:—
FIRE DEPARTMENT.
The most gratifying proof of the expansion of the business is exhibited in the one following fact—that the increase alone of the last three years exceeds the entire business of some of the existing and of many of the recently defunct fire insurance companies of this kingdom.
