UNITED STATES.

Great dissatisfaction is beginning to to be express ed by the people of the North at the seemingly unnecessary delay which is made in the movements of the Treasury Issue. vast army which has gathered on the Potomac for the suppression of the rebellion. Whether there realhas the feeling become, that something decisive to it. must be done soon, that more active operations will have to be inaugurated at once by Gen. McClellan, or he will have to share the same fate as General Fremont. The following is from a speech delivered destination of General Beauregard. in Congress by a member from Ohio :--Our army had long been ready, and our soldiers were burning with a desire to strike at the traitors, and panting for the battle-field. We had earnestly cast about for a bold and daring leader ready for the great contest, and it was painful to confess at this quisite enterprise and genius to lead our forces on to be hurt, or did the ghost of Bull Run hover about he minds of our commanding Generals? We had lost more men by disease and sickness during the of millions of money had been spent, and one of the largest armies of the world gathered to remain comparatively idle, and become weak and demoralized by strike out boldly for victory, and trust to good powder, strong arms, to well-aimed guns, and to God. It would be better to meet with occasional reverses rather than to remain inactive. If we did not fight with justice, right, and human freedom on our side. our people would become discouraged, the Treasury bankrupt, and the Government brought into contempt. Did a General stand in the way to hold in check more than half a million of men, take him out of the way, give his place to another, if there be no other remedy, Generals, of themselves, are nothing in this contest, when thrown into the balance against the honor and integrity of the Union.
