Much distress is said to be existing in many manufacturing towns in England, and no symptom of early improvement. Vegetation was backward.

The foreign intelligence is interesting and varied. The subjoined summary embraces the main features. A quarrel has arisen between the French Legislative Chamber and the Emperor on the propriety of giving a pension and title to the French General who was employed in the Chinese war. This officer was charged by the British correspondents with pillaging for private purposes. His staff entered one of the Emperor's palaces before his allies reached the spot. It was said that the jewelry and other valuables had been removed before any list was drawn up. Now the disposition of two necklaces of pearls in Paris is mentioned as a scandal. The Empress is said to have one, and the court jeweller valued it at £65,000, or thereby; while the Duchess of Malakhoff had another which is supposed to be still more valuable. The pension and title are considered to be in acknowedgment of these rarities. Other causes of distrust exist in Paris. Prince Napoleon has assailed bitterly the pretensions to temporal power for the Pope, advanced by the Ultramontane party at Rome. Dissatisfaction exists in the Church, and the enthusiasm of Lent will be directed against "the dynasty." An intrigue is said to have been discovered, and the HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY. One of the most interesting events of the last week has been the discussion on Mr. Kerr's bill to prevent any further money from being expended in railway construction.
