DOWN HILL.

Not long since I had occasion to visit one of our courts, and while conversing with a legal friend, I heard the name of John Anderson called.

"There is a hard case," remarked my friend. I looked upon the man in the prisoner's dock. He was standing up, and plead guilty to the crime of theft. He was a tall man, bent and infirm, though not old. His garb was torn, sparse and filthy; his face was all bloated and bloodshot;hair matted with dirt, and his bowed form quivered with delirium. Certainly I never saw a more pitiable object. Surely, that man was not born a villain. I moved my place to obtain a better view of his face. He saw my movement, and he turned his head. He gazed upon me a single instant, and then covering his face with his hands, he sank powerless into his seat.

"Good God !" I involuntarily ejaculated, start-

I had half spoken his name, when he quickly raised his head, and cast on me a look of such imploring agony, that my tongue was tied at once. Then he covered his face again.

John Anderson ! Alas ! he was ashamed to be known as his mother's son. That was not his real name, but you shall know him by no other. I will call him by the name that stands upon the records of the court.

John Anderson was my schoolmate, and it was not many years ago-not over twenty-that we left our academy together; he to return to the home of wealthy parents-I, to sit down for a few years in the dingy sanctum of a newspaper office, and then wander off across the ocean. I was gone some four years, and when I returned I found John a married man. His father was dead, and had left his only son a princely fortune.

"Ah, C----," he said to me as he met me at a railroad station, "you shall see what a bird I have caged. My Ellen is a lark, a robin, a very princess of all birds that ever looked beautiful or sang sweetly."

He was enthusiastic, but not mistaken; for found his wife all that he had said, simply omitting the poetry. She was one of the most beautiful women I ever saw. And so good, too, so loving, so kind. Aye, she so loved John, that she readily loved all his friends. What a lucky fellow to find such a wife, and what a lucky woman to find such a husband. John Anderson was as handsome as she, tall, straight, manly, high-browed, with rich chestnut curls, and a face as faultlessly

"Where is John Anderson ?" I asked. "Don't know, I'm sure. He has been gone these last three months. His wife died in the mad-house last week ?"

noble and beautiful as art ever copied. And he was good, too, and kind, generous and true.

I did not see John again for four years. In the evening I reached his house. He was not in, but his wife and mother were there to receive me, and two curly headed boys were at play about Ellen's chair. I knew at once they were my friend's children. Everything seemed pleasant until the little ones were in bed and asleep, and then' I could see that Ellen was troubled. She tried to places: hide it, but a face so used to the sunshine of smiles could not conceal a cloud.

At length John came. His face was flushed and his eyes looked inflamed. He grasped my hand with a happy laugh, called me "old fellow, "old dog," said I must come and live with him. and many other extravagant things. His wife tried to hide her tears, while his mother shook her head and said :

"He'll sow these wild oats soon. My darling could never be a bad man."

"God grant it," I thought to myself; and knew that the same was upon Ellen's lips.

It was late when we retired, and we might no have done so even then, had not John fallen asleer in his chair.

On the following morning I walked out with my friend. I told him I was sorry to see him a I saw him the night before.

"O," said he, with a laugh, "O, that was noth ing; only a little wine party. We had a glorior time. I wish you had been there."

"John, could you have seen Ellen's face las evening, you would have trembled. Can you makher unhappy ?"

He stopped me with-

"Don't be a fool. Why should she be un happy?"

"Because she fears you are going down hill," replied.

"Did she say so ?" he asked with a flushed face.

"No, I read it in her looks," I said.

" Perhaps a reflection of your own thought," h suggested.

" Surely, I thought so when you came home, I replied.

Never can I forget the look he gave me, so ful of reproof, of surprise, of pain.

"C----, I forgive you, for I know you to b my friend; but never speak to me like that. going down hill? You know better. That ca never be. I know my own power, and I know my wants. My mother knows me better that Ellen does."

But I could say no more. I only prayed that God would guard him, and then we conversed o other subjects. I could spend but a day with him, but we promised to correspond often.

Three years passed, during which John Ander son wrote to me at least once a month, and oftene sometimes; but at the end of that time his letter ceased coming, and I received no more for two years, when I again found myself in his nativ town. It was early in the afternoon when arrived, and I took dinner at the hotel.

I had finished my meal, and was lounging i front of the hotel, when I saw a funeral processi wind into a distant churchyard. I asked the landlord whose funeral it was.

'And the children ?" "O, they both died before she did."

I staggered back and hurried from the spot. I hardly knew which way I went, but instinct led me to the churchyard. I found four graves which had been made in three years. The mother, wife and two children slept in them.

"And what has done this?" I asked myself. And a voice answered from the lowly sleeping

"The demon of the wine table." But this was not all the work. No, no! The next day I saw it in the city court room. But this was not the last. I saw my legal friend the day following the trial. He said John Anderson was in prison. I hastened to see him-the turnkey conducted me to his cell-the key turned in a large lock; the ponderous door swung upon its hinges, and I saw a dead body suspended by the neck from a grated window! I looked at the horrible face, but could see nothing of the face of John Anderson there, but the face I had seen in the court room was sufficient to connect the two; and I knew that

And this was the last of the demon's work ; the last act in the terrible drama. Ah ! from the first sparkle of the red wine, it has been down, down, down! until the foot of the hill had been

"TRACT JOURNAL" AND "CHILD AT HOME." Fredericton, N. B., Dec. 1861.

WE have to remind our friends, the Subscribers to the Tract Journal and Child at Home for the present year, that the time has come for the renewal of Subscriptions for 1862.

We would render our heartfelt thanks to those through whose assistance the united subscription lists of the two whose assistance the united subscription lists of the two Papers now amounts, in our agency, to about thirty five hundred monthly, and we would earnestly solicit their co-operation, and the co-operation of others, for the ensuing year, in which we hope to increase the number to ten theu-sand. Already we have the prospect of more than doubling the number in several localities where large numbers are now taken. We will be glad to furnish specimen copies to any who may wish them.
