THE BRILLIANT BATTLE ON FRIDAY.

HEADQUARTERS THIRD ARMY CORPS. NEAR GETTYSBURG, July 4, 1863.

Nearly simultaneously with the opening of the attack on the left movements were discovered on the right, indicating that an effort was made to flank our position in that direction. Our artillery on Cemetery Hill at once opened, throwing heavy vollies of shell over and to the north and east of the town. At this point we had eight or ten batteries in position, covered of 60,000 in Galacia itself, and if a Russian fleet were by earthworks. The enemy responded briskly to our cannonading, but with poor effect, and were evidently much approved by our fire. They, however, pressed their columns on to the right and very soon our infantry poured on that flank and were carnestly encontinuous than on the left.
