place, for interment. At the time of his death he had was recovered with his body.

The Globe of last evening says :--

On Wednesday afternoon the steamer Sunbury was brought down and taken into Rodney Slip, Carleton, where she was left by the tide between 8 and 9 o'clock at night. A large number of persons gathered as the tide receded, and much interest was manifested as to the discoveries that might be made. The feeling of regret was deep and general when it was ascertained that the bodies of the young ladies were not on board ; without doubt they had been carried off by the raft which took away the saloon. Three bodies were found-that of McLaughlin, the trader, that of Livingstone, the cook, and that of French, one of the employees of the boat, who is a Charleston recently. son of a Baptist clergyman, and whose remains were taken care of by friends in Carleton. The bodies were found standing up, McLaughlin's hands were slightly scalded, but, in every case, death appeared to have resulted from drowning. The bloom yet upon the cheek of French told how suddenly death had come. The men when the explosion took place, seem to have made for the gang-way, but the stairs being carried away they got past the place where it had been, and were found in the bow of the

The centre portion of the starboard side of the boat is completely shattered, and the paddle and paddle box, with several feet of the wood work on either side, are entirely carried away. The boiler on that side is broken into a number of pieces which lay piled up like so much broken crockery, testifying to the tremendous force of the explosion, whilst carpet bags, boxes, bales and barrels of flour are scattered about in great confusion. A more melancholy picture of destruction cannot well be imagined. On the larboard side the boiler is in its place.
