ROUGH WOMEN.

The editor of the Religious Telescope is responsible for the following:-

On a recent Lord's day evening we were walking leisurely in a grove, meditating, and, occasionally, repeating portions of a sermon we were expecting to preach. The sun had just gone down, the church bell was calling the people to the holy place, when, in a voice as sharp as a razor, a woman some fifteen rods distant, screamed out, "confound you; I'll knock your head off of you now." We heard every word distinctly. The address was directed to a child -a little girl-and a piercing scream followed a hard slap from the mother's hand. The threat was not executed, as the poor child's head stuck to her shoulders despite the intemperate blow.

This rough woman is an American, who has been reared among free schools, and in sight of the steeples of many churches. Within her reach have been all the advantages of the best Christain culture; and yet she is the next thing to a heathen. She reads nothing, breaks the Sabbath, is slovenly in person, keeps a slovenly house, and, although she loves her children, rails out on them, and beats them, under the influence of her uncurbed temper, ferociously. What
