THE DAY AFTER JUDGMENT. BY JAMES MONTGOMERY. The days and years of time are fled, Sun, moon, and stars have shone their last, The earth and sea gave up their dead. Then vanish'd at th' archangel's blast; All secret things have been reveal'd, Judgment is pass'd, the sentence seal'd, And man, to all eternity, What he is now henceforth must be.

From Adam to his youngest heir, Not one escaped that muster-roll, Each, as if he alone were there. Stood up, and won or lost his soul, These from the Judge's presence go. Down into everlasting woe; Vengeance hath barred the gates of hell, The scenes within no tongue can tell. But lo! far off the righteous pass

To glory from the King's right hand; In silence on the sea of glass, Heaven's numbers without number stand, While he who bore the cross lays down His priestly robe and victor crown; The mediatorial reign complete, All things are put beneath his feet. Then every eye in Him shall see (While thrones and powers before Him fall,) The fulness of the Deity, Where God himself is all in all; O how eternity shall ring With the first note the ransomed sing! While in that strain all voices blend, Which once begun shall never end. In that unutterable song, Shall I employ immortal breath? Or with the wicked borne along, For ever die "the second death ?" Jesus, my life, my light, Thou art; Thy word is in my mouth, my heart; Lord, I believe-my spirit save From sinking lower than the grave.

COULDN'T DO ENOUGH FOR CHRIST.

In the same village in Ohio where I was brought up, there lived, when I was a school-boy, a young man, a temb stone letterer by trade, with whom, as his workshop was near my father's house, I easily formed an acquaintance, and to whom, by daily intercourse, I became strongly attached. He was of a kind, frank, genial disposition, and his manners and conversation were winning. He was a cheerful, touchingly beautiful: jovial companion, and a warm, steadfast friend. For years we were thrown together constantly, and having from the first a liking for each other, our love for one another grew with our intimacy. About the time I left him for college, he quit his trade; and while I was pursuing my studies, he was employed by a manufacturer as a travelling agent in the Southern States. We did not meet again for a long time, and I lost trace of him.

Years passed, and the passing years wrought changes. Near the end of my college course, old things passed away, and all things became new to me. I sought and found the Lord Jesus Christ. I devoted my life to the Saviour's service, and chose to be a preacher of the Gospel. Shortly after leaving the plot of ground, in which he was going to plant out and recalled many of the joys of our more boyish " Three Years' Service in China." days. THE NOVEL READER.

All day long Marcia sat in the corner of the family room, reading a novel. So absorbed was she, it was hard to lay it down to take her meals even. Her mother was obliged to speak more than once if she wished her assistance in anything, and if at last she succeeded by an exercise of authority, in making her do what she was at first requested to, she went to the work with a sullen, tragic air, as if she was the fancied heroine of her story, enduring all manner of persecutions and fanciful distresses.

Aunt Annie, who was but a visitor in the house, took note of all this, but wisely said that it was useless to comment until the heroine was fairly brought out of all her tribulations, and desirably settled in life; thus Marcia might be willing to hear something beside her story. It was ended at last, and with a dissatisfied air the young lady put it aside, and came down to everyday life again .- Never did the stocking basket, with its overflowing contents, look so distasteful to her-after her just taking her departure from such enchanting scenes, fragrant with orange buds, and fluttering with gossamer robes and bridal vails. "Do you feel that your time has been profitably does novel reading make you any happier, Marcia?" "I'm sure it makes me a gread deal happier, while I am reading it, Aunt Annie, and there are a great many lovely sentiments in this book, and real religious truth is inculcated at times. I think it is a real good book, and you would think so too if you would read it, I feel sure."

"What would you think of a miller, Marcia, who "When Christ who is our life shall appear, then | would look over handful by handful a bushel of chaff, shall ye also appear with him in glory." DISORDERS OF THE STOMACH, LIVER, AND BOWELS. The Stomach is the great centre which influences the health or disease of the system-abused or debilitated by excess-indigestion, offensive breath and physical prostration are the natural consequences. Allied to the brain, it is the source of headaches, mental depression, nervous omplaints and unrefreshing sleep. The Liver becomes affected and generates bilious disorders, pains in the side, &c. The Bowels sympathise by Costiveness, Diarrhoa and Dysectery. The principal action of these Pills is on the stomach, and the liver, lungs, bowels and kidneys participate in their recuperative and regenerative operation. ERYSIPELAS AND SALT RHEUM

Are two of the most common and virulent disorders prevalent on this continent; to these the Ointment is especially antagonistic -- its modus operandi is first to eradicate BAD LEGS, OLD SORES, AND ULCERS.
