Poetry.

A JEWISH POEM. When Israel, of the Lord beloved, Out from the land of bondage came, Her Father's God before her moved-An awful guide in smoke and flame By day, along the astonished lands The cloudy pillar glided slow, By night, Arabia's crimsoned sands Returned the fiery column s glow.

Then rose the choral hymn of praise, And trump and timbrel answered keen, And Ziou's daughters poured their lays With priest's and warrior's voice between. No portents now our fear assuage, Forsaken Israel wanders lone. Our Fathers would not know thy ways And thou hast left them to their own.

But present still tho' now unseen, When brightly shines the prosperous day, Be thoughts of Thee a cloudy screen To temper the deceitful ray. And oh when stoops on Judah's path. In shade and storm the frequent night, Be thou long suffering, slow to wrath, A burning and a shining light.

Our harps are left by Babel's streams, The tyrant's jest, the Gentile's scorn, No censers round our altar burns, And mute our timbrel, trump and hora. But thou hast said the blood of goats, The flesh of rams I will not prize, A contrite heart, a humble thought, Are mine accepted sacrifice.

cut, mangled, shattered forms of ice which surround us. We hear the thawing. This is no slip of the pen. In the awful stillness of the place, we hear the ice giving way; here a piece tumbles,-there a stone rolls and starts a dozen more ; now a pyramid of rotten ice totters and falls ; while all the time the gurgling noise of the little torrents makes a strange music in our ears.

Our guide entertained us with the wonders of his experience. He goes often to the summit of Mont Blanc. He thinks it is not dangerous, and yet one needs to be careful. He has often slipped into small chasms, and has been very glad to find that they were not deeper. Sometimes he has just caught himself by throwing his arms over the edges, while his feet were dangling below. Within a month he witnessed the sad disaster by which a favorite guide lost his life. The party were coming down over the Glacier du Basson, the usual route, when all at once a guide was missing. Our guide was selected to be lowered down, if possible, for the rescue. He descended eighty feet, saw where the poor fellow's face was mashed upon one side of the crevasse, and where his knapsack scraped down the other side; but he soon found the abyss filled with foul air, and he had to give the signal for returning. He was drawn up, and the poor lost guide was left in his cold grave, some three hundred feet down in the clear blue ice. The torrent roaring along its bed at a still lower depth is the only requiem of the faithful Coutlet, one of the best of the guides of Chamounix.

But we are now across the glacier, and our route lays along the precipitous side of the mountain. The rocks rise to a fearful height on our right, while on the left we watch the capricious forms of the glacier. We pass torrents which dash at our feet from lofty precipices. We clamber down the "Mauvais Pass" on steps cut in the sheer rock-side where a mis-step would land one a hundred feet below. We reach the foot of the glacier. A river gushes from a cavern, whose roof is full of seams and cracks, as if it which has been cut into the glacier, fifty or a hunthe ice rock is constantly dripping ; we wonder at the

Up, up, up, for two and a half hours we climb, while the valley of Chamounix lies beneath us like a vast trench between the mountains. Summit after summit comes in view, and we find ourselves at length seven or eight thousand feet above the sea level. Here a rude tavern greets our arrival. Mules, mule-men, saddles, side-saddles and alpenstocks make up the furniture, while the travelers prepare to go down upon the glaciers. The mules are taken down the mountain to meet us at another point. We have put on our iron-pegged shoes. The ladies draw woollen socks over their shoes, or put on rough sandals; the guides lead the way; and we go down a series of sharp zigzags, and at length we step on the Mer de Glace. Away stretches the glacier, up and down the valley. The sun glistens upon its white surface, and we cheerfully take the veil, a ceremony for which both sexes have prepared themselves. The ice is as blue as the sky. Across its surface streams of water are running. We take our alpenstocks and leap over. Here is a crack in the ice. Its mouth is wide; its depth is profound. We hurl a stone down, and wait for its splash in the abyss below. It stops, from which we conclude that the chasm does not penetrate the glacier. We come to another. A huge rock is wedged across its mouth, destined some day to plump down. Another is a vortex which receives a full stream of water. Now we go up steps which have been cut in the ice; the guide takes hold of us each in turn, and conducts us along a sharp ridge. He is careful, for a false step do. For sale low. J. C. everything they tell you to." "Yes, everything," answered the boys.

"No, indeed," said the boys.

Frank.

"Everything that is right. But supposing your parents should tell you to do what is wicked, must you do it?"

"I suppose it's right enough," answered Sam,

"Because we love our father and mother," answered

"What is the best way," asked the teacher.

"To mind because we ought to," said one.

"Because God has told us," said another.

"No,"-"I don't know,"-"How can we help ourselves ?" said several of the class together.

"No; you must do nothing wicked. The Bible says, 'We must obey God rather than man.' If a boy's father should command him to lie, or steal, or swear, or break the Sabbath, he must not obey ; no, not it he has to suffer very much. But every command that is not wicked you must obey; though it be ever so hard."

"I haven't got no father nor mother to mind," murmured one of the boys.

"Then," answered the teacher, in a kind voice, 'you must obey them that take care of you, just the same as if they were your parents. And now, boys, there is a promise connected with this commandment You may repeat it."

They did so.

"This is the first and only commandment with a promise. God will surely bless the affectionate, grateful, obedient child ; and I hope every one of you will receive this blessing. A well-ordered home, where the parents are kind and the children obedient, is the happiest place on earth. Now, the parents take care of the children; by-and-by the children will take care of them in their old age. This is God's wise and good arrangement."

Chairman of the London Board .- SAMUEL BAKER, Esq. Chairman in Liverpool .- CHARLES TURNER, Esq. The Royal Insurance Company is one of the largest Offices in the kingdom.

At the Annual Meeting held in August 1859, the following Per ships Carrig, Sea Gem, Princess Royal and Wanderer highly satisfactory results were shown FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The most gratifying proof of the expansion of the business is exhibited in the one following fact-that the increase alone of the last three years exceeds the entire business of some of the existing and of many of the recently defunct fire insurance companies of this kingdom The Premiums for the year 1855 being.....£130,060

While the Premiums for the year 1558 are 196,148 Showing an actual increase of or upwards of 50 per cent. in three years.

The recent returns of duty made by Government for this latter year (1858) again show the "Royal" as more than aining the ratio of its increase as stated in former years. Unly one among the London insurance offices exhibits an advance to the extent of one-half the increase of the Company, while all the others respectively fall far short of the noiety of its advance.
