BE KIND. I would not hurt a living thing, However weak or small, The beasts that graze, the birds that sing-Our Father made them all, Without whose notice, we have read,

'Twas but the other day I met a thoughtless boy, Bearing a pretty nest away; It seemed to give him joy ; But O! I told him it was wrong To rob the little feathered throng.

A sparrow cannot fall.

I passed another by, It seemed a saddened thing To see him seize a butterfly, And tear away its wing, As if devoid of feeling quite; I'm sure that this could not be right,

The patient horse and dog, So faithful, fond and true, And e'en the little leaping frog Are often abused, too, By thoughtless men and boys who seem Of others' comfort not to dream.

Yet surely in our breast A kindlier soul should dwell, For 'twas our blessed Lord's request To use his creatures well; And in his Holy Book we find A blessing given to the kind.

THE YOUNG MEN OF OUR TOWNS.

In every point of view the importance of young swered. men, as a class, can hardly be exaggerated. It must take hold of the heart when it is easiest to be possessed, and when able church officers and members are made. It is not to all young men that our remarks will

Many expedients had been tried in the school to keep out that arch-enemy of all teachers, whispers. At length the following plan was adopted :- The first whisperer was put upon the floor in front of the teacher's desk. Here he acted as a monitor; as soon as he detected another, he took his seat, and the next offender kept a sharp lookout to find some one to take his place; for, at the close of the school, the scholar who had the whisperer's place was punished very severely, as the school phrase was, "took a ferling!" This plan appeared to operate very well; every one dreaded being found last on the floor; but though it secured an orderly school, many of the parents doubted its justice.

The boy who was on the floor when Eurice lost her place, was an unruly, surly fellow, who had smarted for his faults often before; and as the school drew near its close, he began to tremble. Overcome with shame and fear, she stood by the desk crying bitterly, while the teacher was preparing to inflict the punishment.

At this moment a tall boy stepped out of his seat, and going to his desk, said;
