SIMPLE MEANS BLESSED.

The autumn of 1859 had been passed at a small watering place in the neighborhood, where daily intercourse with the honest, brave sailors and coast-guardsmen, on the picturesque old wooden jetty, had resulted in many a hearty friendship.

A LITTLE CHILD SHALL LEAD THEM.

A rich Count of Silesia, having frequently visited Berlin, Frankfort, and Paris, had imbibed a bitter hatred against Christiauity. The conversation of worldly men, the reading of infidel books, the pleasures to which he was addicted, the large fortune he enjoyed, all had inclined his heart to sceptical principles. Returning home, he shandoned himself without restraint to sensual pleasures, and openly professed infidelity, diffusing this poisonous influence all around

As he had in his gift the appointment of the parish paster where his domains lay, he presented a young minister whom he had formerly known at the Uniwersity, and who was no more religious than himself. These two men seemed to vie with each other in infidelity. Being the count's favorite companion, the unworthy pastor sought only to please his patron. Their talk at table and elsewhere was often mere scotting at sacred things, so that the servants, frivo lous as they were, were often shocked.

The count was, as may be supposed, highly pleased with his pastor. He told him often that his greatest delight would be to see all religious opinions-which he called superstitions -effaced gradually from the minds of his vassals; and he added, that if he could obtain such a result, he should think he deserved well of the country. The parish thus went on very badly, and implety prevailed in all its forms. Only one man-the schoolmaster-resisted the current but he had no great learning or authority, and he was under the jealous watch of the pastor, who did not wish the children to hear evangelical troths, or, as he said, to be imbued with dark and gloomy no. Temperance health; tions.

What human means were there to rescue this German count, since the paster himself encouraged him in his infidelity? But that which is impossible with man, is possible with God. "A poor child of about eight years," writes the count afterwards to one of his friends, " was chosen by the Good Shepherd of our souls to be an evangelist to me, and to lead me from infidelity to living faith. The event will be for me a perpetual motive to adore my Redeemer."

The case was thus :---One day the count, walking over his grounds, heard the aweet voice of a shild in the garden. He approached, and saw a little girl who was singing, gested on the grass, her eyes moistened with tears. The sight excited his curiosity; he entered the garden, and seeing that the little girl had a sweet and intelligent air, he felt moved with pity, the more so as her mean clothing showed that she belonged to a very poor family.

'Why do you weep? are you sick, my child?' asked the court.

'No,' she replied, 'but I weep because I am hap-

Here are "God's heroes," the heroes of the sick chamber and the vi gil by the cradleside; the heroes of poverty and of the workshop; of silent, patitent endurance, having learned, through much tribulation, that waiting and suffering is their destined work; the heroes of longsuffering, forbearance and charity, or of victory over pain; of the unostentatious self-denial of the household; the lowly, tolling, sad women, climbing mounts of sacrifice under heavy crosses, without a buman hand held out in sympathy; the noble army of martyrs who have found and followed the Master's foot-prints in the daily rounds of human duties, transfiguring that despised, circumscribed, cars encumbered life of theirs into a living testimony to the truth of Christ's evengel; the lonely sufferers, priests by the heavenly consecration, offering the sacrifices of praise in garret and cellar; men and women far from stimulating delights of successful activities, co-workers with Christ, sowing in hope the seed whose increase they shall never reap; "the sacramental host of God's elect," ever ascending with songs most jubilant from the faithful performance of carth's lower ministeries to the perfect service of the upper sanctuary with its perennial and inhindered prize. They are passing up through the gates of the morning into the city without a temple, and it is for other fingers than ours to weave the amaranth round their lovely brow .- North British

Combs, and Brushes; removing stains from the hands, and grease from Carpets, Cloth, Finnet, &c. It makes Hard Water Boft, and may be used with good effect in Baths, as the skin. A small quantity should also be used in the foot pan. It forms a cooling and cleansing wash for the head, by dissolving a teasphouful of the Crystal in a quarter of a pint of water; and for cleansing the Mouth, Teeth, and ums, it is quite a luxury, by adding a teaspoonful to a tumbler of water. It renders linen beautifully white, and unlike other preparations, at the same time preserves the fabric. It contains nothing injurious to life. A child eat ing it by mistake, will not be injured.
