FAITH.

Rev. J. C. Ryle lately prepared a selection of hymns. After the selection was completed and all in type, he received, from an unknown source, a hymn which he thought so denowledging the pleasure and profit they have derived from this particular hymn, and especially from the clearness with which it expresses doctrinal truth.

Faith is a very slender thing, Though little understood ; It frees the soul from death's dread sting By resting in the Blood.

It looks not on the things around, Nor on the things within ; It takes its flight to things above, Beyond the sphere of sin.

It sees upon the throne of God, A victim that was slain, It rests its all on his shed blood, And says, "I'm born again."

Faith is not what we feel or see ; It is a simple trust In what the God of love has said Of Jesus, as "the Just."

The perfect One that died for me, Upon his Father's throne Presents our names before our God, And pleads Himself alone.

What Jesus is and that alone. Is faith's delightful plea, It never deals with sinful self, Nor righteous self, in me.

It tells me I am counted "dead," By God in His own Word ; It tells me I am "born again," In Christ my risen Lord.

In that he died, he died to sin ; In that he lives-to God ; Then I am dead to nature's hopes, And justified through blood.

If he is free, then I am free, From all unrighteousness; If he is just, then I am just; He is my righteousness.

What want I more to perfect bliss ?--A body like his own Will perfect me for greater joys Than angels round the throne.

ing, firm and substantial, rising, story upon story, until the upper windows looked out far, far over the broad landscape on every side. " This is to be, for a time at least, your home," continued Buster's guide. The boy was silent. Those stone walls might hide many a dark cell; perhaps there was one in store for sirable that he cancelled one of his selection to make room him. Yet the word " home " had a cheerful sound ; for it. Since the publication of the volume, it is said he has a home the poor lad had never known ; he would not received a large number of letters from various parties, ack- banish the pleasant vision that its bare mention had conjured up; he would patiently wait until his fate should be made known to him.

Chapter 1V.

THE STONE BUILDING.

Buster's heart beat fast as he mounted the stone steps that led to the great building that had been pointed out to him.

The door was unlocked, and he entered with his companion.

Through a wide clean hall he passed into a neat, comfortable parlor, with its rocking-chairs, piano, and every mark of comfort.

"You may sit here a few moments," said his companion. "I will return for you shortly."

Buster sat down alone in the large room, then rose, walked round it, astonished to find himself on a carpeted floor and surrounded by so many signs of plenty.

He had hardly completed his survey when his conductor returned. Sitting down by him, the stranger said, "Buster, my boy, you have had enough of a poor, miserable, wicked life. I don't want you to grow up to sin and shame. I have brought you here to be taught to do right, and to learn to lead an honest, useful, Christian life. There are more than three hundred boys in this building. Some of them, like you, have never had any home, and some have been brought up in wicked homes, where they have never learned anything good. When they come here, we wash them and put on them clean clothes, and tell them we want them to leave all their dirt and wickedness behind them. My boy, you have heard of the great God who made you. He formed your body by his wonderful power, and he can make your bad heart pure. He can help you to leave off swearing, lying, stealing, Sabbath-breaking, anger, and every wicked way. I want you to kneel down as I do, and I will ask him to help you and make you better, for the sake of his dear Son." Buster mechanically knelt down, but kept his eyes open and fixed upon his companion's face.

Very earnest was the short, simple prayer that he heard offered for him, and love and sincerity were marked on the countenance of the speaker. "You a'n't a sham, anyhow," said Buster, as the gentleman rose from his knees. After a moment of silence, he said, "Go now, my
