lines, composed by a very near relative of the decease Come all my friends who on me tend, In this most trying hour; A witness I will leave with you Of God's almighty power. He by his grace has made me free,

And I shall stand among the just. O come, my friends, and brothers dear, And bow around my bed; Come let me hear you pray again, E'er I am numbered with the dead.

And you, my sisters dear, give God your heart; Seek wisdom from his holy word; With every sinful idol part, And heaven will be your great reward. Come, bend with me your sinful knee, And on the Saviour call;

O let me see your humble state, And freely I'll surrender all. And you, my father, mother, dear, I want you to pray on, Until you reach that happy place, Where I, your son, hath gone.

O will you hear my dying words-Your diligence increase, Until we meet in heaven above, Where joy and love shall never cease. All you who come to gaze on me, Behold a miracle of grace!

And soon he'll bring his harvest home, And join his kindred too. Now to the shining world above, I stretch my hands and glance my eyes; O soon I'll leave this world below. And dwell with God above the skies,
