Poetry.

THE SEASONS.

Beauteous Springtime, how I love thee!
Robed in sunbeams, clad in flowers;
All seems bright, beneath, above thee,
Songsters hail thee from their bowers.
Oh, reign of beauty, of delight,
Enchanter of the ear and sight,
All seasons have their charms for me,
But none of them such charms as thee.

Thou mindest me of childhood's years:
Like them thou minglest smiles and tears.
Thou art the dawn of Nature's life;
With her rich beauties thou art rife.
Like childhood, too, thou dost disclose
The flowers that soon in beauty blows.
Like childhood, thou art blithe and gay,
But like it thou must pass away.

Glorious Summer, beauteous, bright,
In Nature's richest garments dight,
A charm around thee thou dost throw,
Which gladdens all things here below.
Touched with thy magic wand, the earth
To all her glories now gives birth,
And from thy dawning to thy close,
Creation with thy beauty glows.

Thou mindest me of youth's bright days,
When pleasure charms and gilds our ways,
And care and sorrow glide away,
Like gathering clouds beneath thy ray.
Like youth, in beauty thou art clad;
Like it, thou makest all things glad.
Like youth, thy charms soon pass away,
And hasten on life's little day.

Golden Autumn, thou'rt rich and grand;
Thou come'st to all with open hand,
Scatterest the fruits of earth and tree,
And all Creation welcomes thee.
All Nature smiles beneath thy sway;
The songbirds pour their richest lay:
Beauty, grandeur, o'er all prevail—
Oh, glorious season, thee I hail!

Thou mindest me of manhood's years;
Thy gathering clouds are like its cares;
Thy changing leaves are like its joys,
Which earthly care or trouble cloys;
Thy produce represents to me
The fruit of manhood's industry;
Thy fading beauties tell me, too,
That manhood fades as well as you.

Hoary Winter! disrobed and bare
Is all Creation, once so fair,
And desolation reigns around,
Where beauty at each turn was found;
And yet I love thee, for to me
Nature's long sleep thou seem'st to be,
From which she will again arise,
And with her beauty charm our eyes.

Oh, thou dost mind me of old age,
The close of this life's pilgrimage,
When earthly joys will flee away,
And cheer not life's declining day;
When tired Nature sinks to sleep,
And wrapt in slumbers long and deep,
Dreams of a world beyond the sky,
Where flowers bloom, but never die.

THE FIRST AND LAST LITTLE TIFF:

A STORY FOR YOUNG MARRIED PEOPLE.

By Nelsee Brook,

(Concluded from last week.)

All the afternoon his mind was discomposed. Now he was condemning Edith; then he was condemning himself. "It was a small thing to ask of her," he soliloquised. She might just as well have got dinner ready at half-past twelve as at any other time." Then he said, "but perhaps she might have been hindered in some way. If I hadn't been so hot I dare say she would have explained everything satisfactorily. It's not a bit of good to try to drive women; I've never done so before, and Edith has always been ready to lay down her life for me. Haven't I often done little things provoking enough to rouse a saint? and yet she has never said anything unkind or annoying to me. I'm an unmanly, unkind fellow. But I'll make it all up at tea-time; it will never do for us to be having little tiffs; it's good-bye to peace and comfort if we do. I might just as well have gone without a dinner for once—it wouldn't have killed me. Or I might have eaten what I did eat with a good grace, and like a gentleman, instead of like a bear. I am all to blame."

Now, that afternoon Edith soliloquised in something of the same fashion. She put the dinner things away, swept up her little room, then sat down and cried till her head ached. "Just to think of Harry's unkindness!" she said to herself. "I couldn't have thought he would have treated me so—to go away without even saying good-by. I'm sure he might have made a dinner very comfortably, with a little cheese afterwards, if he hadn't been so disagreeable. Here, we've had a regular tiff, and no one can tell where it will end, for I shan't give in first. I did my best to get dinner ready; and if it was a little late, it was the first time it has been so, and it was all through my working so hard for Harry." Then she changed her tune and said, "Poor, dear Harry! to think he should go without a dinner on such a miserable, catch-cold day! I ought to have begged him to get a chop when he arrived in Manchester. It was dreadful careless of me to sit like an idiot at that work and forget dear Harry's dinner; and on his birthday, too!—it was enough to make him cross. And I ought to have told him that I had been working at something particular for him, and so let the time slip by without knowing it. Then he would not have said a word, there would have been all sunshine. For often I have been provoking, I know, and Harry has always looked over my faults, like a dear, good fellow as he is. It was reasonable to suppose that he would feel annoyed to come in and see no dinner laid to-day, and then, when he sat down to it, to find it half cooked. I ought to have explained everything. I'll tell him all when he comes home. But suppose if he should never come again! There might be a railway accident, and he might be killed. How dreadful! I should never, never forgive myself for having parted ill friends. If God in his mercy should spare him to return to me this evening, I will be the first to make it all up with him. I only was to blame."

When Edith had made this resolution, she felt happier. She put an iron to the fire, and when it was hot she got the waistcoat and carefully pressed it. It looked quite beautiful. No one but a tailor could have told that it had not been made by one of his own craft.

When Edith had folded it away she put on a large, coarse apron, and proceeded to light a fire in the parlor. "We'll spend the evening in here, as it is Harry's birthday," she said. The fire, as it burned up briskly, made the room look so comfortable. Edith drew Harry's favorite chair from its corner to the hearth-rug. She went to a pile of music, and sorted out Harry's favorite pieces, which she arranged on the piano, intending to play to him in the evening.

Then she went out into the cold, damp garden, to see whether she could find enough flowers to make a boquet for the tea-table.

If Harry could only have seen her as she tripped about the house, preparing for his coming, his restlessness and remorse would have redoubled. Home-made tea-cakes were baking in the oven; the choicest of her preserves were brought to light; the silver tea-pot, which was kept for state occasions, was on the table this afternoon, waiting to be filled with fragrant tea. The best china was beautifully arranged for the evening meal; and at last there was nothing else to do but to make the tea, and prepare the cakes for the table. This could not be done until Harry arrived. Edith put on her best black silk dress in honor of the occasion; and the pink ribbon which fastened her pretty lace collar vied with the blush of expectancy that mantled her face.

Once and again she looked at her watch with an air of nervous impatience. "Perhaps Harry won't come to tea, as we were so upset at dinner time," she said to herself. Then a shade of terrible fear crossed her face as she thought what he might do, where he might go to. "God preserve him!" she ejaculated, silently.

She tried to sing one of her homely songs, but the words seemed to stick in her throat; she re-arranged one thing after another on the table that was in perfect order; and, lastly, she took her stand at the window.

The lamps were lighted, and the air was becoming thick with fog. The omnibuses, by which Harry was accustomed to return home from business, passed by the house heavily ladened. Yes, they all passed by. Where could Harry be? Edith peered out into the increasing fog until it grew quite dark. She was just turning, with a sigh, from the window, when she heard the gate open. It was Harry at last. He caught sight of her figure at the window. The glowing light of the fire behind made her a conspicuous object. Now was the time of trial; Edith's heart beat quickly. The circumstances of the dinner-time flashed through her brain like lightning. The old proud spirit was struggling, fighting within for the mastery. Suppose if Harry should repel her conciliatory advances. would not the rift be widened? Suppose—suppose—.

Edith walked somewhat tremulously to the front door. Her hand was unsteady as she drew the latch back. How would Harry walk in? Would he pass her by before she could get out the loving words she meant to utter, and stalk sullenly into the parlor?

She opened the door with a quick, nervous movement, looked up in his face and said, in a low, rapid voice, "Harry, darling, I'm so glad you are come. How late you are!" His arms were around her before she could finish the last sentence. The fervent pressure of his lips spoke forgiveness, peace—all that she desired.

"I hope I have not kept you waiting tea, dear," he said, as he led her into the parlor. "Dear me! What a brilliant affair! Are we to have company this evening, Edith?"

No; we shall be alone. But you know it is your birthday, Harry dear, and of course everything should look more pleasant and brilliant on such an occasion. I had intended to have things look comfortable and beautiful at dinner-time, but I must tell you—" Edith's eyes were full of tears, and her voice was quivering.

"You shall make no confession, Edith. I was a regular bear. You ought to be as angry as possible with me. Hey-day! What's this I'm crushing?"

He was just seating himself in his arm-chair, upon which Edith had placed the parcel containing his birthday present.

She laughed through her tears as he started up, and said, "It is something for you, Harry."

He deliberately untied the parcel and brought the waistcoat to view. "It must be a mistake," he said; "I have not ordered one yet, though I thought about doing so, for my best is beginning to show signs of debility. This is firstrate cloth," he added, holding it to the light and examining it; "just my style, Edith. When I give an order it shall be for an article the fac-simile of this. Who brought it, dear? It must be returned."

He looked up. Edith's face was flushed, and her eyes were sparkling with merriment now.

"It is yours, Harry," she said.

"Mine! Do you mean to say you have had the impudence to go and give my tailor an order?" he said, laughingly.

"Nay; not I. It was made at home by our sewing-machine."

"Our sewing-machine!" echoed Harry, "we haven't one."

Edith held up her hands before him, and smiled provokingly.

"You're a tantalizing little piece of goods," he said. "Will you favor me with a lucid explanation of this mystery?"

"I made the waistcoat for you, Harry," she replied. "You only half believed me when I told you that I could make one, so I have given you a proof of my ability. And I was working at it so busily this morning that I unconsciously let the time slip by and forgot all about the dinner—such a nice dinner I meant to prepare for you, too, dear."

"Never mind, Edith; it was not the least difference in the world. I thought you were careless, and did not trouble about the favor I asked of you before I went out in the morning. I felt worried and impatient, and I behaved in a most wretchedly, unmanly way. I want your forgiveness, dear; I trust I shall never forget myself in such a manner again. And to think that after all it was on account of your working for me that you were late with the dinner, and so flurried and troubled, as I know you were."

"I was careless," persisted Edith.

"You were too good," responded Harry; and he added after a pause, "it was a miserable tiff, wasn't it, Edith? A little patience and a short explanation would have spared us all the pain that we have endured this afternoon. If you had only told me that you had been busy sewing."

"Yes," interrupted Edith, "I was going to. But when you spoke in a cross tone I felt so angry and proud that I would not explain matters. But I've suffered on that account this afternoon, Harry. I have reproached myself soundly."

"How cruel!" chimed in Harry, with a smile.

"And now, dear, we must make a new resolution," said Edith.

"What is that?"

"Never to begin a tiff about anything until there has been a calm and full explanation given on both sides. When that has been done we will proceed with the "tiff" in a cool and business-like manner!"

"You are a philosopher, Edith?" laughed Harry. "There will never be a tiff if we make explanations and confessions first. Better reverse the order of things or we shall never get one," he added mischievously.

"O, Harry, we don't want them in our home," said Edith earnestly. "Don't ever let us have another, eh, dear?"

"Not if I know it," said Harry. And rising up he pronounced in a stentorian, serio-comic voice, "Thus endeth our first and last little tiff."

Then he turned to the waistcoat. "Eh, Edith, it is a capital waistcoat. Magnificent cloth, and what splendid work! Really I must keep the making of it a secret from my friends, or I fear you will be overwhelmed with orders. You are the cleverest housewife under the sun! that's a fact. I will go and put it on: the temptation to be fine is too great to be resisted, especially as your toilet is so charming this evening."

I need not tell you what a pleasant evening they spent; how Harry luxuriated in his new waistcoat and his easy chair; how sweetly Edith sang and played, now that her heart was so light, and the heavy cloud had rolled forever from her home.

For ever, I say, for months and years passed by, and all was harmony and peace still. When little differences arose—as we know they will arise, even in the best ordered homes—they were amicably settled by quiet explanation and prompt forgiveness. Parents and children dwelt together in unity.

The circumstance that I have recorded was really Mr. and Mrs. Warnford's "first and last little tiff."

In conclusion, I transcribe the following lines for the benefit of my married readers:—

"Something light as air—a look,
A word unkind or wrongly taken—
O! love that tempests never shook,
A breath, a touch like this hath shaken.
And ruder words will soon rush in
To spread the breach that words begin,
And eyes forget the gentle ray
They wore in courtship's smiling day,
And voices lose the tone that shed
A tenderness round all they said;
Till fast declining one by one,
The sweetnesses of love are gone,
And hearts so lately mingled seem
Like broken clouds, or like the stream
That, smiling, left the mountain's brow
As though its waters ne'er could sever,
Yet ere it reached the plain below,
Breaks into floods that part forever."

THE ROYAL INSURANCE COMPANY, 92 Lombard-street, London, and Royal Insurance buildings, Liverpool.
Chairman of the London Board.—SAMUEL BAKER, Esq.
Chairman in Liverpool.—CHARLES TURNER, Esq.

The Royal Insurance Company is one of the largest Offices in the kingdom.

At the Annual Meeting held in August 1859, the following highly satisfactory results were shown:—

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The most gratifying proof of the expansion of the business is exhibited in the one following fact—that the increase alone of the last three years exceeds the entire business of some of the existing and of many of the recently defunct fire insurance companies of this kingdom.

The Premiums for the year 1855 being.....£130,060
While the Premiums for the year 1558 are.... 196,148
Showing an actual increase of..... 66,088 or upwards of 50 per cent. in three years.

The recent returns of duty made by Government for this latter year (1858) again show the "Royal" as more than maintaining the ratio of its increase as stated in former years. Only one among the London insurance offices exhibits an advance to the extent of one-half the increase of the Company, while all the others respectively fall far short of the moiety of its advance.

LIFE DEPARTMENT.

The amount of new Life Premiums received this year is by far the largest received in any similar period since the commencement of the business, and must far exceed the average of amount received by the most successful offices in the kingdom. The number of policies issued in the year was 832, the sum assured £387,752 6s. 8d., and the premium £12,354 3s. 4d. These figures show a very rapid extension of business during the last ten years. Thus:—

Years.	No. of Policies.	Sums Assured.	New Premiums.
1848 ..	98	£48,754 17 0	£1,389 9 1
1850 ..	190	95,650 9 11	2,627 4 7
1852 ..	422	181,504 10 6	5,828 5 10
1854 ..	408	161,848 13 4	4,694 16 0
1856 ..	703	297,560 16 8	8,850 3 11
1858 ..	832	387,752 6 8	12,354 3 4

The remarkable increase in the business of the last four years is mainly consequent upon the large bonus declared in 1855, which amounted to no less than £2 per cent. per annum on the sums assured, and averaged 80 per cent. upon the premiums paid.

This Remedy is truly a Family Medicine. It can be used with the positive assurance of doing good in all cases where pain or uneasiness exists.

It is the cheapest medicine in the world. One fifty cent bottle contains more medicine, as well as being a superior medicine, than one dollar's worth of the ordinary pain-killers, liniments, &c., of the day.

One fifty-cent bottle of Radway's Ready Relief will do more good, and can be used for more purposes, than ten dollars expended for any other medicine in use.

"Your Ready Relief and Regulating Pills do our family more good than all the physic and doctors we have had for years. If my children fall and bruise, or otherwise hurt themselves, the Relief removes all pain and discoloration of the skin; if they burn or scald themselves, the Relief takes out the fire, and relieves them from anguish. I could not sleep without a bottle of Radway's Ready Relief within my reach. So with the Pills—the very moment my stomach or bowels are out of order, one of Radway's Pills is all that I require to restore my system to order and regularity."

HARD Rubber Trusses.—We have just received a few of these Trusses. The maker says: "After devoting considerable time to the investigation and treatment of this disease (Hernia or Rupture), and becoming familiar with the practical working and defects of the various kinds of Trusses in use, the instrument now under consideration was devised with the view of combining (if possible) all the good qualities of other Trusses without their faults, and after actual and oft repeated experiments, it is believed to accomplish this long sought and desirable object in a much more effectual and satisfactory manner than any other Truss." These Trusses can be washed without injury

CHILDREN TEETHING

MRS. WINSLOW,

An experienced Nurse and Female Physician, presents to the attention of mothers, her

SOOTHING SYRUP,
For Children Teething,

which greatly facilitates the process of teething, by softening the gums, reducing all inflammation—will allay all pain and spasmodic action, and is

SURE TO REGULATE THE BOWELS.

Depend upon it mothers, it will give rest to yourselves, and RELIEF AND HEALTH TO YOUR INFANTS.

We have put up and sold this article for over thirty years, and can say, in confidence and truth of it, what we have never been able to say of any other medicine—NEVER HAS IT FAILED, IN A SINGLE INSTANCE, TO EFFECT A CURE, when timely used. Never did we know an instance of dissatisfaction by any one who used it. On the contrary, all are delighted with its operations, and speak in terms of highest commendation of its magical effects and medical virtues. We speak in this matter "what we do know," after thirty years' experience, and pledge our reputation for the fulfilment of what we here declare. In exhaustion, relief will be found in fifteen or twenty minutes after the syrup is administered.

This valuable preparation is the prescription of one of the most EXPERIENCED and SKILFUL NURSES in New England, and has been used with never failing success in

THOUSANDS OF CASES.

It not only relieves the child from pain, but invigorates the stomach and bowels, corrects acidity, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. It will almost instantly relieve GRIPING IN THE BOWELS AND WIND COLIC, and overcome convulsions, which, if not speedily remedied, end in death. We believe it the best and surest remedy in the world in all cases of Dysentery and Diarrhœa in Children, whether it arises from teething or from any other cause. We would say to every mother who has a child suffering from any of the foregoing complaints, Do not let your prejudices, nor the prejudices of others, stand between your suffering child and the relief that will be Sure, yes absolutely sure, to follow the use of this medicine, if timely used. None genuine unless the fac-simile of CURTIS & PERKINS, New York, is on the outside wrapper. Sold by Druggists throughout the world.
