"NOW I LAY ME DOWN TO SLEEP."

In the quiet nursery chambers, Snowy pillows yet unpressed, See the forms of little children, Kneeling, white-robed for their rest. All in quiet nursery chambers, While the dusky shadows creep, Hear the voices of the children,-" Now I lay me down to sleep."

In the meadow and the mountain Calmly shine the winter stars, But across the glistening low-lands Slant the moonlight's silver bars. In the silence and the darkness, Darkness growing still more deep, Listen to the little children, Praying God their souls to keep.

"If we die,"-so pray the children, And the mother's head drops low; (One from out her fold is sleeping Deep beneath the winter's snow.) "Take our souls :" and past the casement Flits the gleam of crystal light, Like the trailing of his garments Walking evermore in white.

Little souls that stand expectant Listening at the gates of life, Hearing, far away, the murmur Of the tumult and the strife; We who fight beneath those banners, Meeting ranks of formen there, Find a deeper, broader meaning In your simple vesper prayer.

When your hand shall grasp the standard Which to-day you watch from far, When your deeds shall shape the conflict In this universal war, Pray to him, the God of battles, Whose strong eye can never sleep, In the warring of temptation, Firm and true your souls to keep. When the combat ends, and slowly

Clears the smoke from out the skies, When, far down the purple distance, All the noise of battle dies, When the last night's solemn shadows Settle dark on you and me, May the love that never faileth,

He began right, and I think that is the only way to prosper .- Well-Spring.

AN HOUR WITH A MANIAC.

A FACT.

Some years since I was travelling in the Northern States, for the benefit of my health. I found some kind friends, and among them was Mr. H .---- and his wife, who resided in a small cottage near the village of D-. They had been married but a few months, and as Mrs. H. found herself rather lonely while her husband was in his shop, she gave me a pressing invitation to make their house my home, while I remained in the village. I gladly accepted the offer, and many pleasant hours did I spend in that quiet retreat, where the poetic idea of " Love in a cottage" was fully realized. The house was yet unfinished, and as the chamber where I slept was small, my trunk was placed in a closet in one corner of the room, the entrance to which was closed by a muslin curtain in place of a door. On the evening of my arrival Mrs. H. removed the curtain, and invited me to examine some rare and curious things which the closet contained. Among the relics of the Revolution, I noticed a military uniform once worn by her greatgrandfather, who fought side by side with Gen. Washington. Here was his trusty rifle, his epaulettes and gleaming sword, all carefully preserved. I took that sword in my hand, and shuddered to think how many hearts it had pierced, how many souls had been sent to a dread eternity upon its point.

Mrs. H---- often spoke of a cousin of hers, a young man of brilliant promise, who had become intemperate, and for this had been expelled from college. From that time his course was downward, and she feared he was swiftly hastening to a drunkard's grave. And he so young and beautiful, so talented, so kindhearted, with such noble and generous impulses. Oh, she felt as though she could not have it. Could not something be done to save him from a fate so dreadful ? I saw this unhappy young man, and truly he was all that she had described him. In person, tall and commanding, a lofty, expansive brow, locks of raven bue, features strikingly beautiful, and O, what a world of intelligence slumbered in the depths of those large soul-lit eyes ! Methinks I see him now, just as he appeared one evening as he stood in the midst of a flower garden, and gazed with rapture on the setting sun. I looked out from my window with emotions I cannot describe. Suddenly I heard a sob at my side, and I turned to hear the oft-repeated question, "What can be done to save him. Must so much excellence be lost?" I left them the next day,
